YOU'RE SHIPPING up to Boston, whoa oh oh! To hear it told in the bars, it seems like half the city appeared in The Departed as extras. Yeah, right—you were in the background of that one scene, but they cut it when they went to edit the footage and saw that Alec Baldwin's fly was down...

BABY DADDY
Tom Brady

TOM BRADY is even more clutch than we thought. The guy's barely found out that he knocked up Bridget Moynahan when rumors start flying about Gisele having a Bündchen in the oven. We guess this is what happens when a QB doesn't have any receivers on the field—Tom Brady will make his completions one way or another.

BOSTON'S ANSWER TO A BRAWL
The Fight at Symphony Hall

WHO KNEW the Pops hosted such a tough crowd? In this corner of the balcony, wearing Dockers and a blue button-down, we have Michael Hallam. His opponent, wearing the pressed Polo shirt and Brooks Brothers no-iron khakis, is Matthew Ellinger. Let's get it on! Ellinger and Hallam got tossed from the Pops' opening night for their sudden fisticuffs, which ironically arose out of a squabble over keeping quiet during the show. The fight halted the performance for a full two minutes, and we imagine the music stopped with a discordant violin note. All told, there hasn't been this much chaos in a theater balcony since the Muppets.

CHUMP
Ron Borges

THE COLD, HARD Football Facts Web site (run by Quincy football guru Kerry Byrne) was the first to call out Globe football reporter Borges for plagiarizing material from the News Tribune in Tacoma, Wash. On March 5, the Globe suspended Borges for two months. Apparently the time off gave him pause to consider his next move, because on May 18 he announced his retirement. In announcing Borges' initial suspension, the Globe mentioned that he "has on occasion been controversial for his contrarian views and his criticism of the Patriots' head coach, Bill Belichick." Covering football, Borges should've known: Bill Belichick always wins in the end.

DJS: Afternoon Radio
Toucher and Rich, WBCN

TOUCHER AND RICH are the best thing to happen to WBCN since Howard Stern went to satellite. It's clear that they try their damnedest every single day to create a funny show, and over time they've developed some great bits—the Drunken Red Sox Recap, the Chili Guy, sending Adolfo out into the city just to be Adolfo. Tune into WBCN some weekday between 3 and 7 pm, and you might be surprised to find that Opie and Anthony are actually the second-funniest DJ duo on 104.1.

DJ: Morning Radio
Matt Siegel, KISS-108

DAY AFTER DAY, year after year, Siegel takes the KISS-108 mike for four hours and presides over "Matty in the Morning," a show that manages to remain entertaining without succumbing to the insidious "Wucka-wucka-wucka, we're your zany zoo crew!" virus that afflicts so many jocks. Siegel understands that listeners on their way to work don't need a manic voice blaring from their speakers. Instead, he and his cast of characters deliver a mellow, sardonic vibe that's an ideal way to start the day in a city that's manic enough on its own.

MICKEY MOUSE
The Giant Inflatable Teamster Rat

NOTHING SAYS "Non-Union Laborers at Work" quite like the Teamsters' giant inflatable rat, which they set up outside offending job sites. Looking like a cross between Chuck E. Cheese and Chucky from the Child's Play movies, the Teamster rat adds a certain je ne sais quoi to our fair city. Also, if you ever want the Colonnade rooftop pool all to yourself, just show up with this as your float toy.

Hot Neighborhood
South End

MUCH of the South End's growth has been happening around Harrison and Washington streets, or the area unfortunately called SoWa. Not so long ago known for (a) Medieval Manor and (b) readily available crack, SoWa's now home to cute shops (Devi, Parlor) and high-end dining (Rocca, Oishii, Sage, the poised to open Gaslight) plus a Boston Sports Club. There's an immaculate artificial turf lacrosse/soccer field and more new lofts and condos than you can shake a stick at, not to mention the arrival of the Beehive on Tremont, bringing live music to the 'hood. If this kind of growth keeps spreading north, soon Herald employees will have lunch options that don't involve General Gao's chicken.

Stella's patio (above) on Washington Street offers prime people-watching opportunities; while Tremont Street (below) has amassed theater and entertainment options.

LOCAL ARTISTS

Peter Berdovsky and Sean Stevens

WE'RE GONNA go out on a limb and say that no local artists got more attention this year than Berdovsky and Stevens. Perhaps you remember their work? It involved a Lite-Brite Aqua Teen Hunger Force character flipping the bird and resulted in the stupidest bomb scare in Boston history. Unintentionally, Berdovsky and Stevens revealed a city prone to hysteria—and one incapable of showing a cartoon character flipping the bird on the evening news without pixelating the offending gesture. Gee, are we uptight much? Perhaps this was a woefully misguided marketing stunt, but at least Berdovsky and Stevens recognized the absurdity of their situation, at the peak of the outrage holding a press conference in which they refused to discuss anything besides their hair.

Gregory Floyd

HERE IN BOSTON, we tend to think of Samaritanism as swerving around an old lady in a crosswalk instead of bumper-checking her. But in New Hampshire, they take things a bit further, as Floyd demonstrated last spring. He turned the corner on a rural road in Franconia and witnessed Bode Miller's cousin, Liko Kenney, shooting local cop Bruce McKay. So Floyd grabbed McKay's gun and pulled a regular Jack Bauer, demanding Kenney drop his weapon. Kenney wouldn't put down his piece, so Floyd shot and killed him. (Floyd was later cleared of any wrongdoing.) Yeesh. We guess they take that license plate motto pretty seriously up there.

MOST MISSED
Tie: Red Auerbach and Mitt Romney While in Office

IT'S PROBABLY for the best that Auerbach didn't live to see the 2007 tanking of his team or the debut of the Celtics dancers. A larger-than-life character in the tapestry of Celtics lore, the cigar-chomping C's patriarch was the puppet-master pulling the strings that led to many a championship. Whatever happens from now on with the Green, there will never be another Red. Also dearly missed was former governor Romney, who took telecommuting to new levels last term by running an entire state from afar while stumping for his presidential campaign. When informed that Deval Patrick spent silly money on new drapes for the governor's office, Romney replied, "I was perfectly happy with the old drapes, because I'm fiscally responsible and… wait, my office had drapes?"

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO Citibank's Private Dave Matthews Concert at the Wang

NOT ONLY DID Citibank honchos and VIPs get a frickin' private Dave Matthews concert, they got a goodie bag loaded with treats ranging from a Johnny Cupcakes T-shirt to a coupon for two lobsters from Legal Seafoods. Other parties last year might've been bigger, but this one had the highest envy quotient, hands down.

PLACE FOR A FIRST DATE
The North End Quasi-European Tour

YOU WANT TO IMPRESS a date, take her to Italy. It's a no-brainer hitting the North End for dinner and some pastries, but we suggest you delve deeper into the culture. After dinner, stroll down to the bocce courts and watch the old guys playing for a bit—it's a scene straight out of Naples. To really feel European, though, you need to smoke, so head to Stanza dei Sigari, where you're still allowed to light up. If chomping on a cigar seems unladylike, order her one of the vanilla cigars for women, and let her in on this typically male scene. You'll be the architect of a first date unlike any other.

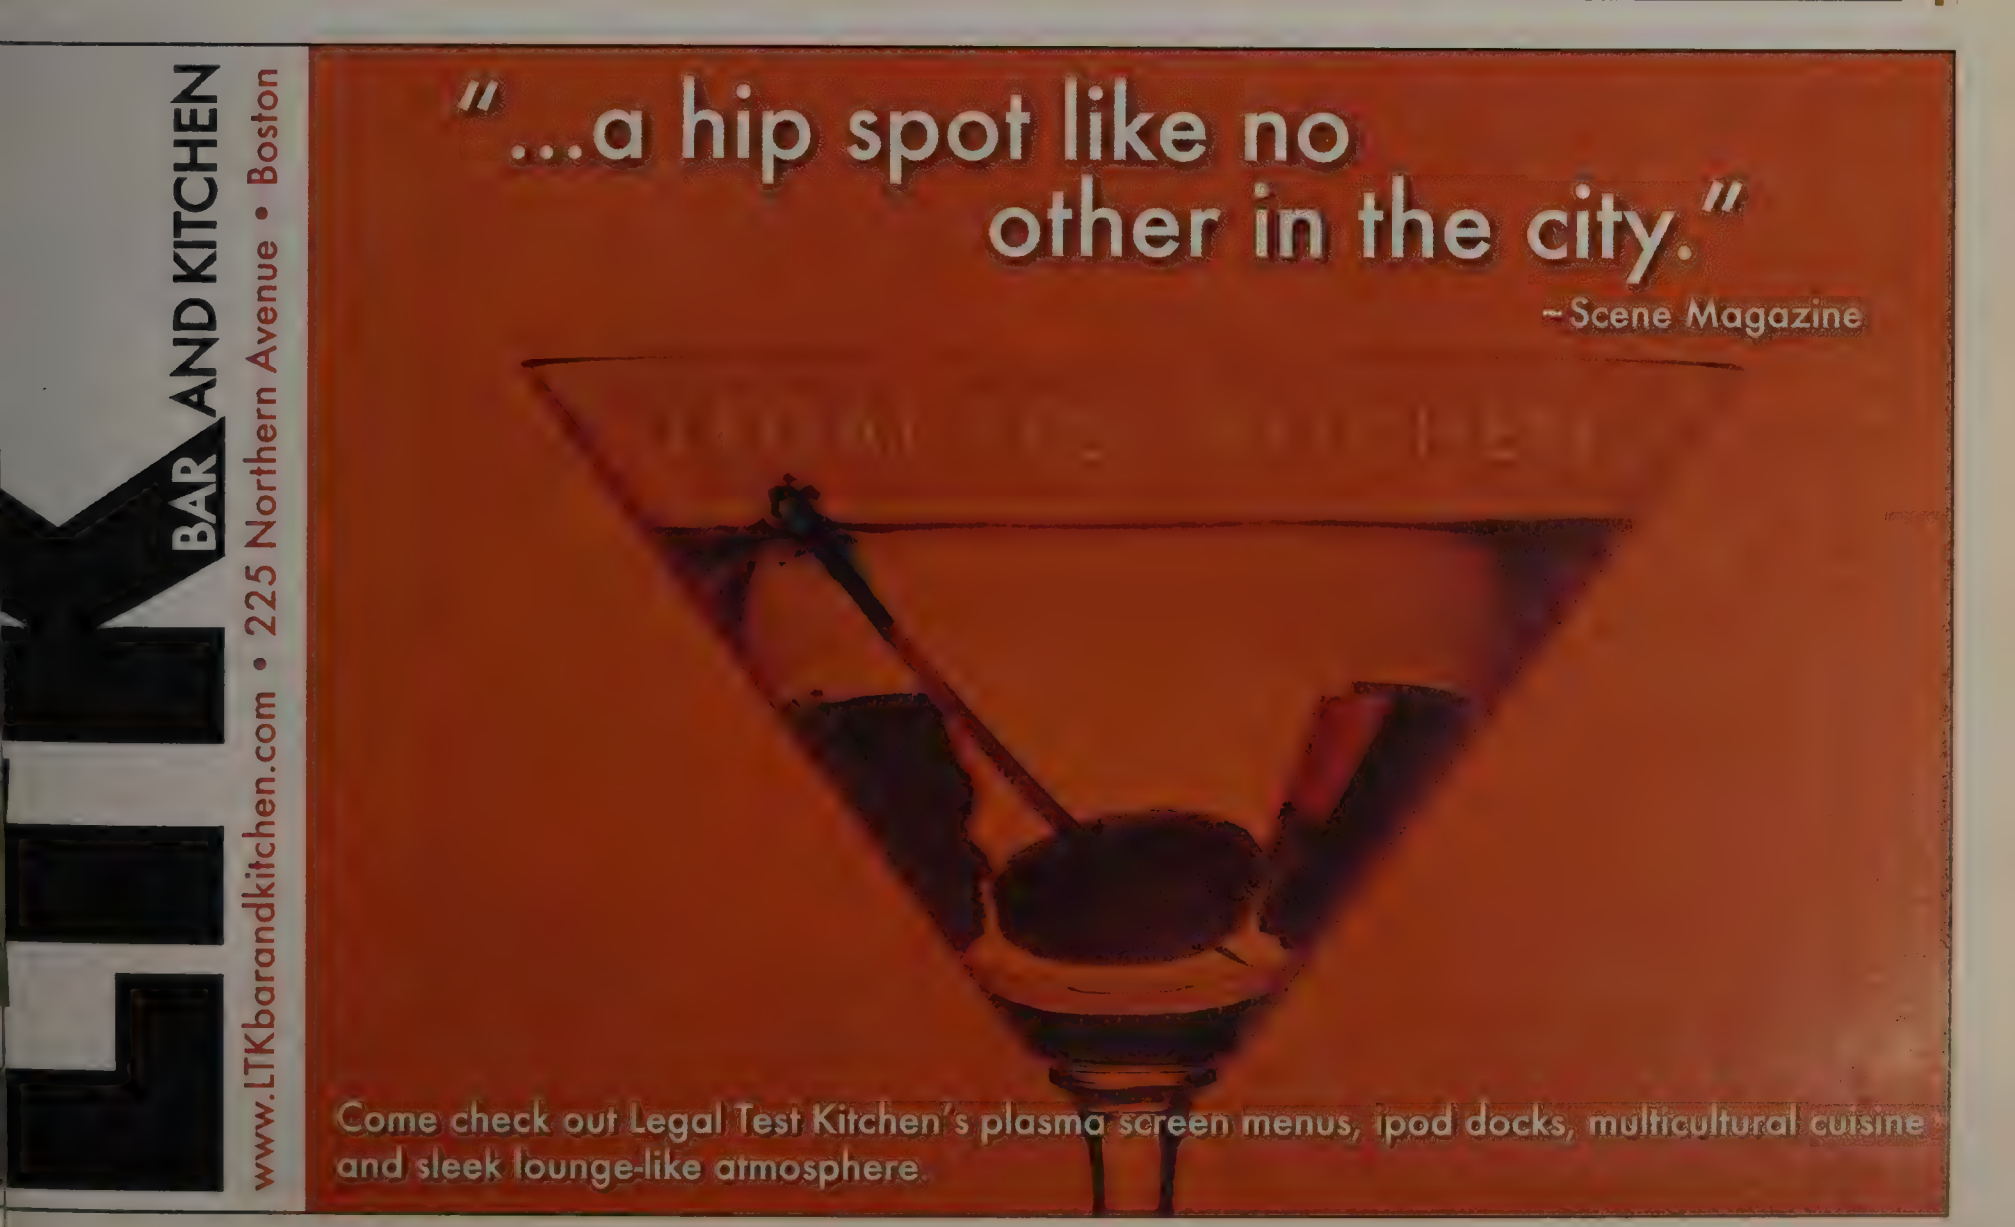
PROMOTION
Frances Rivera



LAST FALL, WHDH's Frances Rivera got kicked upstairs, moving from the 4, 4:30 and 5:30 pm broadcasts to an anchor spot opposite Randy Price on the weeknight 5, 6 and 11 pm newscasts—a position described by the Herald as "one of the most coveted seats in Boston TV news." Not that she needed further validation of her news chops, but Rivera's work also recently won her an Emmy from the National Academy of TV Arts and Sciences—New England Chapter. Enjoy her while she's here, because we have a hunch that the next time she gets promoted, Rivera's going national.

RUN-OF-THE-MILL NEWS STORY
The Westwood Neo-Nazi vs. AOL

LAST AUGUST, the Globe ran yet another typical story about a Jewish Westwood kid named Andrew Greenbaum who went to college in South Carolina, started a neo-Nazi group and changed his name to Davis Wolfgang Hawke. He was eventually outed by a human rights group and subsequently spurned as "the Kosher Nazi," but went on to make millions of dollars sending penis-enlargement spams to AOL customers, eventually triggering a lawsuit in which AOL won a court injunction to dig up his parents' backyard to look for the money, some of which he allegedly converted to gold bullion and buried like he

BROADCAST DUO

Jerry Remy and Don Orsillo, NESN

THERE ARE people who think that Remy and Orsillo don't take their jobs as Red Sox announcers seriously enough. We think those people should go find a puppy to kick, because one of the best things about summertime in Boston is watching a Sox game called by this NESN duo. They're comfortable enough in their abilities and knowledge of the game that they don't need to show off. Instead, they indulge in plenty of fun and acknowledge that—gasp!—baseball games can get boring. And it's when Remy and Orsillo are bored out of their minds and laughing through a commercial break, or arguing whether you should compliment a woman on her tattoo, that we're happiest to have them behind the mikes for the better part of 162 games.

SMOKING GUN, NOT!
The Fake Big Dig Ceiling-Collapse Memo

AFTER THE TRAGIC Big Dig roof collapse, John J. Keaveney, then a safety official for Modern Continental Construction Co., a Big Dig contractor, gave the Globe a fake memo claiming he warned everyone about the bunk ceiling epoxy back in 1999. In a July 26 story, the Globe wrote, "Keaveney's memo, written May 17, 1999... almost eerily foretells the collapse that crushed Milena Del Valle to death two weeks ago." Well, the reason the memo was so eerily prescient is that hindsight is 20-20, as the Herald was only too gleeful to point out.

USE OF A BIG DIG VENTILATION BUILDING
The State Trooper Driving Range

WHO KNEW our state troopers were so madcap as to construct a driving range inside an Eastie Big Dig building? This story, uncovered by the WBZ I-Team in May, led to minor disciplinary action for the sergeant and five motorcycle troopers involved with the makeshift range. No word on whether said troopers are competing to see who can use the word "meow" the most times in a single traffic stop.

WASTED WATERFRONT WATERING HOLE
The VIP Bar at the Bank of America Pavilion

IMAGINE IF THE best waterfront bar in Boston was only open during Bank of America Pavilion concerts, and only then to VIPs. That would suck, right? Well, the VIP bar at the BofA Pavilion has a great view of the city and an expansive outdoor bar, all right on the water. But most of the time, it's not even open. We know Boston has a penchant for wasting prime real estate (hopefully the criminals enjoy that waterfront view on their way to arraignment at Moakley Courthouse!), but the BofA VIP bar really makes us say, "WTF?"

WORST PLACE TO MAKE OUT
The Gym

WE'RE NOT SURE anyone actually makes out at the gym, but we figured we'd take a preemptive step in identifying this as the single worst place to get frisky in the city. We hereby declare bro hugs as the absolute limit of acceptable public displays of affection inside a fitness club.

WEATHERMAN
Peter Bouchard Channel 7

IT'S A FACT that Bouchard's forecasts are 15 percent more accurate than any other Boston weatherman's. OK, so we made that up. But we do love Bouchard, both for the way he seems genuinely apologetic when delivering bad weather news and for the way he manages to freeze his facial expression for up to 10 seconds during awkward cuts back to Today. Now we just wish we could get him to reprise the Family Guy news anchor's line about the weather here: "You know what they say about the weather in New England: If you don't like it, why don't you go back where you came from!"

SUPER 88 MARKET

IF YOU'RE continually frustrated that major supermarkets don't carry the exotic ingredients your cookbooks call for, check this place out. Located in Chinatown, they stock a lot of generally hard-to-find foods. Rice noodles, five-spice powder, live crabs and durian fruit? They're all accounted for when in season. The original Super 88 opened on Essex Street more than 25 years ago and catered to Boston's Asian population, but good news travels fast, and now you're just as likely to see a Wasp from Wellesley or a Hasidic Jew from Brookline in the well-stocked aisles. Many of the best chefs we know go here for the fresh seafood. Unlike at American supermarkets, the food at Super 88 isn't packaged and salted to a fare thee well, and unlike many other organic or so-called "all-natural" markets, their prices aren't nosebleed high, either. Life's too short to put up with run-of-the-mill food. 73 ESSEX ST., BOSTON, 617-423-3749; 50 HERALD ST., BOSTON, 617-423-1688; WWW.SUPER88MARKET.COM

ANIMAL HOSPITAL

Angell Animal Medical Center

THE ANIMAL equivalent of Mass. General, Angell Memorial can handle all your pet's health needs. They offer emergency and critical care services 24/7, 365 days a year, whether your pooch had an unpleasant run-in with a porcupine or your boa constrictor's come down with pneumonia. The level of care is flawless, and specialty services include neurology and acupuncture for pain management. They also handle adoptions, spaying and neutering, and animal blood donation. Yes, you read that correctly: Injured animals need transfusions, too, and Angell holds donation days when they take blood to help other pets in surgery or recovering from trauma. The veterinary staff includes 20 residents and 40 specialists, and they also offer help with behavior training for problem pets. If money's an issue, they have financial aid, having handed out more than $300,000 to needy pet owners last year alone. Now that's what we call humane. 350 South Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain, 617-522-7282, WWW.MSPCA.ORG

ANTIQUES STORE

Marcoz Antiques Inc.

FOR 35 YEARS, Marcoz has specialized in 18th- and 19th-century European antiques, selling all kinds of collectibles—from furniture to clocks to cushions. Each exquisite piece is of the highest quality, and affable owner Marc Glasberg handpicks all of his one-of-a-kind items, which means that when your competitive friend admires your new Queen Anne breakfront, you can rest assured she won't have the same one in her dining room the following week. Glasberg also handles special orders, interior design, custom lamp shades, upholstery, restoration and repairs, working directly with local artisans and supervising each restoration as if it were his own heirloom. The store is housed in a classic 19th-century townhouse left completely intact, including the original stairway, and Glasberg's staff share his easygoing style and dedication to quality. ARTS AND CRAFTS STORE

Artists & Craftsman Supply

THE EMPLOYEES at Artists & Craftsman Supply in Central Square are put through an intense training regimen, no matter how extensive their education or background in art. That means they know their way around the store's staggering inventory of art supplies—everything a budding or accomplished artist might need for drawing, painting and sculpting, not to mention supplies for Asian art such as hake, suki and origami. But what we like best about A&C is they never lose sight of the basics. The simple stuff is in stock and easy to find—whether it's white paint and black pens or drawing tablets and brushes. Custom framing is a major aspect of the business, which further differentiates it from other art stores. They also do material cutting and give personalized, trustworthy advice on whatever project a customer may be contemplating. BOOKSTORE: Independent

Trident Booksellers & Café

TRIDENT OPENED MORE THAN two decades ago as an unpretentious café where readers could sit down with a good book. That simplicity remains—only with a bigger menu. Today the bookstore serves full breakfast, lunch and dinner to go along with that biography or body-building magazine you just can't put down, and if you happen to be thirsty, there's a blender bar to make almost any kind of smoothie or juice imaginable. They've even got a machine for fresh wheat grass shots. But food and drink are secondary, both in name and fame, to the bookstore. Their selection spans genres as well as the globe, and regulars know the helpful staff will provide precisely what they're looking for, either on the shelves or by special order. Unlike at other bookstores, there's no eye-rolling at offbeat or unusual requests. The staff is friendly, smart and as passionate about the quest for a great read as you are. Don't be surprised if they ask for your name and remember it when you come back. And trust us, you'll be back. 338 Newbury St., Boston, 617-267-8688, WWW.TRIDENTBOOKSCAFE.COM

BOOKSTORE: Used
Bryn Mawr Book Store

WITH THE SPARE CHANGE in your pocket, you could head over to Bryn Mawr Book Store and walk away with a 16th-century classic. It's been that way since the beginning. Back in the '70s, a few Bryn Mawr alumnae organized a book donation and sale to benefit the college's scholarship fund. It went so well, they decided to make it a full-time business. Times have changed, but the ridiculously low prices haven't. Thirty-some-odd years later, the store is still going strong, thanks to a small but dedicated staff, not to mention an incredible array of rare and hard-to-find used books. Their sources range from local bibliophiles to educational institutions who donate old tomes—most of which sell for either $1 (hardcover) or 50 cents (paperback). With some expensive exceptions, most rare books may cost up to (gasp!) $5. And while that might seem like chump change to you, that money adds up for Bryn Mawr students, who receive between $40,000 and $60,000 in scholarships each year from the store's sales. Supporting a good cause and acquiring a good book for less than it costs to take the T? Sounds like a win-win to us. 373 Huron Ave., Cambridge, 617-661-1770, WWW.BRYNMAWRBOOKSTORE.COM

CAR WASH
Wash World

FACE IT: Your car is dirty, and no amount of "It's going to rain tomorrow" rationalization is going to change it. Why not head over to a gem of a car wash in Needham? Wash World will primp your ride like the pearl it is. They offer two types of detailing: express, which requires no appointment and includes vacuuming, upholstery cleaning and that ineffable fresh scent, and (the more expensive) full-service detailing, complete with hand-buffing and -polishing (available by appointment). Like an amusement park for your car, there's a 120-foot soft-cloth tunnel, but before you even get there, the staff has hand-washed those tough stains on your windshield and windows. When it's over, your ride is lovingly hand-dried, so none of those nasty water streaks will mar the sheen. Their exterior specialties include undercarriage cleaning and assorted waxes, but for do-it-yourselfers, they've got coin-op vacuums and shampoo machines. So show your car a little love. It's worth the schlep. 70 TV Place, Needham, 781-453-3262

THE THOUGHT OF COOKING for a few good friends is enough to send some people into a tailspin. Imagine cooking for a few hundred (or thousand) of the most discerning and demanding people in Boston. That's what Max does on a daily basis, to consistent oohs and ahs. Whether it's a small dinner party in a private home or a black-tie gala for Boston's biggest charity, Max has been there, done that, and the food is always finger-lickin' good. Basing their menus on the personality of the host or the nature of the occasion, their creativity ranges beyond finger bowls and little take-out containers to arranging furniture and lighting for maximum atmosphere, but what makes them so wow-worthy is the restaurant-quality food. The menu changes seasonally but their standards never do. Many of their in-house chefs have art degrees in addition to culinary training, so the presentation is consistently gorgeous. THE GOOFY Newbury Comics logo, which looks like the artistic product of either a small child or a drug addict, says it all: They're not the prettiest, maybe, and probably slightly crazy, but undeniably happy. You'll be happy, too, when you find that elusive CD on their racks, and at an affordable price, to boot. Featuring music from all genres and every culture, they retain the vibe of an indie shop but still don't feel cluttered or disorganized. Whether you're just browsing or you've got a specific recording in mind, the store's layout feels smart and natural. Aside from CDs, the store also sells DVDs (both film and TV), clothes, accessories, posters and toys, all with their quirky, slightly skewed sensibility. (Don't be surprised to walk in and see a realistic-looking cat sleeping on the floor, while Metallica fans will rejoice at finding their idols in bobble-head form.) What makes the store truly amazing, though, is the staff. They actually act like they enjoy working there—smiling, laughing and, most important, knowing where everything is. For more expensive, delicate items or unique stains, you can opt for their HollyCraft cleaning, a deluxe service done entirely by hand. Holly's other services include tailoring, storage and wedding-wear preservation. You want to immortalize your gown or tux? Holly will get rid of the cake and wine stains, then preserve it to a degree an art museum might envy. Their pick-up and drop-off service is available throughout greater Boston, and it's augmented by staffers who'll come to your home and do specialized jobs like cleaning your drapes. HOW LONG has that lettuce been in your fridge? Better yet, do you have any idea how long it was at the grocery store before you took it home? If the idea of weeks-old romaine gives you the shivers, try shopping at the Massachusetts Farmers' Markets located throughout the Boston area, where local farmers bring their produce together and sell it at fair prices. All the fruit, vegetables, dairy products and meats have been grown and harvested locally, so they stay fresh longer and taste better than, say, spinach shipped from California. In addition to preserving local farms (and offering resistance to big agribusiness and factory farming), the goods sold at the farmers' markets tend to be free from the chemical preservatives and additives used to ship many fruits and veggies long distances. The spacious, open marketplace provides a charming, Old World atmosphere, and whatever you buy here is sure to be of better quality than the supermarket. City Hall Plaza, Copley Square, Dewey Square, Central Square, Framingham and Davis Square, 781-893-8222, WWW.MASSFARMERSMARKETS.ORG

That's where the personality shines through. If you can't make it to the store or have a large event planned, Winston will send consultants. They ask questions about the person or place receiving flowers, then concoct an arrangement accordingly. For events, Winston can set up anything from classical to contemporary looks, depending on the setting or style of the gathering. Along with their consultants, Winston also sends out various executives to make sure the entire process goes as planned. And if you've got a specific theme in the works, Winston will create a tailored arrangement. WHAT'S YOUR WORST nightmare when shopping for furniture? If it's buying something that doesn't fit (not just aesthetically but physically) into the idiosyncratic and often cramped spaces of a Boston apartment or condo, well, worry no more. FOR DECADES, Roche-Bobois has been French for "fabulous" when it comes to home décor. Split into three different categories, their collections offer distinct styles—Les Contemporains for contemporary European design and utility, Les Provinciales for a classic French look, and Les Voyages, which derives its influences from far-flung, exotic locales. But all three collections share a dedication to superb craftsmanship and the highest-quality manufacturing. Much of the furniture is hand-rubbed, and all of it's built to be timeless. In fact, some of the sofas in their showroom have been bestselling models for more than 30 years (and, no, they don't come with cup holders). The close interaction between manufacturer and designer results in pieces that follow current trends while maintaining utility. But what many people don't know is that Roche-Bobois also offers full-service interior design. In other words, instead of spending the extra dough on a designer, they'll send an employee to turn your house into something from Better Homes and Hangouts. 2 Avery St., Boston, 617-742-9611; 579 Worcester Road, Natick, 508-650-5844; WWW.ROCHE-BOBOIS.COM

GIFT SHOP
Museum of Fine Arts

MUSEUM GIFT SHOPS don't have anything you didn't see on a fifth-grade field trip, you say? Before rolling your eyes dismissively, give the MFA's a go. They feature one of the largest, most comprehensive collections of art books in the country, some unavailable elsewhere. They also keep the merchandise consistent with current exhibits, which means it changes three or four times a year. If a show captures your imagination, you'll find some related item—from the sublime (gorgeous reproduction knickknacks) to the ridiculous (refrigerator magnets)—that span everything from children's toys to fine jewelry. Because the merchandise relates to the museum's major shows, you can assemble a tastefully themed goodie bag, and their staff is outstanding at suggestions. Yes, it'd be nice to give that Gauguin upstairs as a birthday present, but this is the next best thing. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-369-3575, WWW.MFASHOP.COM

Motley Home

SOUTH END hip sans the attitude, it's as folksy a neighborhood place as you can imagine, the sort of shop you can't resist popping into whenever you pass by. Instead of advertising, the owners take that money and sponsor parties and events aimed at enhancing the neighborhood. As for inventory, when you've got all the basics, it's time to focus on style, which is Motley's strong suit. Encompassing everything from tabletops to lighting, the merchandise is, in fact, a motley assortment, much of which you won't find in other stores. Looking for a hand-carved animal head? They've got it and more, from high-end items to everyday doodads. They also get three or four new shipments per week, so the turnover is constant. An excellent place to buy a hostess gift or house-warming present, you're bound to find something you want for your own place, and in every imaginable price range, so that visiting doesn't mean

HOME STORE
Hudson

HUDSON WILL spare you the runaround and sales palaver you get at larger stores, because it has it all—furniture, lighting, bedding, candles, pottery, paper goods and just about anything else your house could need. If it's not in stock, they'll special-order it for you, and there's a lot of unique merchandise—about 20 percent of what's on display was bought by the owner, given plenty of TLC and put up for sale. Hand-sewn pillows and reupholstered furniture, for example. God forbid, should your order be delayed or screwed up, Hudson will rectify the situation quickly and honestly; no lying or passing the buck. Beyond that, the owner herself often calls to make sure customers are ultimately satisfied with their purchase, which is why so many of them are fiercely loyal. 312 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-292-0900, WWW.HUDSONBOSTON.COM

REI

THE FENWAY might not be the first place that comes to mind when you think of the great outdoors, but REI should be. They're a co-op—so that by paying a one-time $15 fee, you'll save 8–10 percent on full-priced items, and at year's end, you'll receive a dividend check for the amount you saved on the stuff you bought all year. It might sound like an annoying gimmick, but it's well worth it for anyone who wants to outfit themselves for hiking, camping, skiing, kayaking, biking, rock climbing, or just having something dry to walk the dog in. Even armchair lumberjacks will find something they need, and if you have no idea what you need, the supremely helpful staff will find you the exact right piece of equipment. Staffers also lead Outdoor School, a series of days designed to introduce urbanites to the joys of hiking, mountain-biking, paddling, etc. You'll come back feeling like a mountain man (or woman), and if you're not up for a day in the woods, REI offers in-store clinics for outdoor fun. The kind of place that makes you want to tackle the Appalachian Trail, they have everything you need to do it. 401 Park Drive, Boston, 617-236-0746, WWW.REI.COM

PET SERVICES
Doggone—It!

AS ANYONE with a dog knows, your pooch is king of the house. You let him sleep anywhere, chew on anything and you feed him on the sly under the table. You might as well go whole hog and make him look the part. Doggone—It! will take your pooch from feral to fabulous with their superior grooming services. The staff rivals that of any Newbury Street spa or salon, as do the services and products they use. The variety of shampoos alone—hypoallergenic, oatmeal, medicated, scented and even ones that'll lighten or darken your dog's fur—is mind-boggling. They offer haircuts, from scissor trims to complete shaves by appointment. Nail-trimming can be done on a walk-in basis, and they sell a wide selection of toys, treats, collars, leashes, beds, food and all other things canine. If you work all day, Doggone—It! can send an employee to your home to walk and play with your pet for 30 minutes, then bring him back for some fresh water and treats. Going on vacation? They offer boarding services that are the canine equivalent of a five-star resort. Spoiling your pet has never been this convenient. 556 Comm. Ave., Newton, 617-244-3003

SHOE REPAIR
Rinaldi's Shoe Repair

THE MEAN (and sometimes cobblestone) streets of Boston are known for their brutal massacre of shoes, but those gorgeous new pumps need to be shown off. Unless you plan on walking barefoot through Back Bay, you should make the acquaintance of Rinaldi's Shoe Repair. Whether you need your heels replaced, a hole patched or a complete resoling, Rinaldi's does it better than anyone. They specialize in higher-end shoes, which explains why many of the fancier footwear retailers on Newbury Street recommend Rinaldi's to their customers. Other services include shoe dying; simply bring in the dress or a piece of fabric you want your shoes to match. The small staff gives personal and professional care to each pair (no matter how bad they smell). There's just no excuse for looking like you just hiked through the Khyber Pass in your penny loafers, especially as their prices are in line with the competition and way less than buying a new pair of shoes. 31 St. James Ave., Suite 198, Boston, 617-426-6480

BELMONT WHEELWORKS is celebrating its 30th anniversary this year, and we can see why. Employees approach each customer with the simple goal of matching him or her with the perfect bicycle. Whether you plan on riding down Mount Katahdin, commuting to work in an eco-friendly manner or taking a leisurely Sunday ride, the sales staff will ensure you wind up with the right set of wheels. They also perform repairs and teach classes on how to fix bikes. Peter Mooney, their star employee, builds custom bike frames by hand, a boon to long- and short-legged riders who can't find the right fit with mass-produced, single-sized bikes. WHEN WINTER ARRIVES, if skiing's not your thing, you've got only two options: You can sit around on the couch until the snow melts, or you can grab a snowboard and shred some powder. Instead of putting a permanent dent in the sofa, check out Eastern Boarder's custom snowboard shop. The staff is as patient with neophytes as they are enthusiastic with Olympic hopefuls, and they'll walk you through the process step-by-step, from choosing the right-sized board to finding the appropriate clothes. Once you're properly outfitted, they'll customize a board with bindings and boots, including heat-molded liners, which contour your boot-liner to the exact shape of your foot. If your board took a beating last winter, they also offer hand-waxing,

They'll also do custom bike fittings—so the only thing that chafes will be those spandex shorts—and repair and tune-up your cycle (you can bring your new bike back within 30 days to get a free tune-up). For golfers, PGA-certified pros will help you find the perfect driver, and you'll know because the store has a driving range where you can show off that 300-yard swing. For joggers, Dick's has an indoor track to test out a new pair of running shoes, and yes, they do have cheerleading shoes, which we guess is proof positive that cheerleading is, in fact, a sport. 180 Providence Highway, Dedham, 781-329-2862; additional locations in Natick, Saugus, Brockton and Danvers; WWW.DICKSSPORTINGGOODS.COM

NOT ALL TATTOO PARLORS are sketchy places. Take Stingray Body Art. The shop defies all the tattoo stigmas and stereotypes. It's wide open and well lit. Instead of having one master artist and a bunch of apprentices, Stingray has six master inkers, all of whom specialize in a particular style. In the initial consult, you'll be matched with the artist whose style best fits what you're looking for. As for the ink itself, they've developed a computer program that sorts and files all tattoos. You can search for designs by keyword, size and color, or hook up to the Internet and print pictures from Web sites. Got some old art that needs a facelift? Stingray can also touch up faded tattoos, as well as do body-piercings and permanent makeup. You can even pick up a T-shirt to go with your new look: The shop sells a cool assortment of clothing by local designers. HOW CAN THEY give us tank tops for $5.90, cute cuffed shorts for $14.90 and halter dresses for $24.90? One reason: They sell a slew of them. This Sweden-based success story moves the clothes out as fast as they move them in, which is true even for the line "designed by Madonna & H&M." YOU WON'T FIND the usual designer names at Louis Boston, nor garments sorted by category, nor salespeople working on commission. They're as pricey as a store can get, but Louis Boston groups their suits, shirts, casual jackets and ties in the way a man would wear them—by outfits rather than by what's most convenient for the business. And the clothes are a cut above anything else in the city. Four of the salespeople, including the beloved Arthur Jordan, have close to or more than 30 years of experience under their gorgeous belts. As former New Yorker Robert Lemmond, a devoted Louis fan, says, "This is head and shoulders above anything in New York. It's the cutting-edge kind of selection I enjoy, for both businesswear and casual. Other stores follow their lead." And the prices? "You have to pay for quality."

WELCOME ADDITION
David Yurman

FOR BOSTONIANS, David Yurman has always come in bits and pieces: a bracelet here in a boutique with other jewelry; a ring there in a primarily wristwatch shop; cufflinks at a department store; inexpensive faux copies in every shopping mall. But we've never gotten to see the whole collection with its famous "cable candy," the gold or silver cable bangles with precious stones of all colors dotting the ends, in all its glory—until now. The David Yurman boutique is slated to open this month, with jewelry designed by the same boy who sold his first creation, a hand sculpture in 1959, while still at Great Neck High School. WOMEN'S MODERATE CLOTHING
Stil Clothing

STIL BRINGING, er, still bringing mostly Scandinavian style to Boston, owner Betty Riaz had the smarts to realize, when she opened her tiny shop on Newbury three years ago, that local women were starved for looks from northern Europe. With a California fashion background and a former home in Oslo, her concept was to introduce "Bohemian feminine" clothes to our business casual city. The edgy and understated dresses, shirts, jackets, handbags and skirts are like nothing else on the street, which means you won't meet your dress at the same party or restaurant. So what if you can't pronounce the designers (try "Baum and Pferdgarten," for one)? They're just different enough to garner compliments. PYTs take note: The new Chestnut Hill Mall Stil caters to a more mature crowd. Though still cool, the clothes are less young and edgy. 170 Newbury St., Boston, 617-859-7845, WWW.STILINC.COM

Moxie

MOXIE ROCKS. You can tell by the black satin heels with toes sharp enough to draw blood (only in case of an attack, mind you); soft, sexy metallic high-heel sandals by Italian designer Claudia Ciuti; handbags by Texas designer Marnie Bugs; and gem-stoned thongs in rhinestone and turquoise. Plus, they carry so many of the hot Tory Burch patent bags and ballet flats—all with the distinctive logo at the toe—that even Bloomingdale's sends customers to Beacon Hill for shoe fixes, because they can't stock them as quickly as this small, independent footwear boutique. 51 Charles St., Boston, 617-557-9991, WWW.MOXIEBOSTON.COM

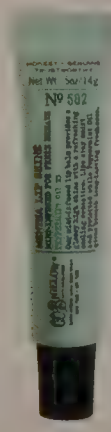
Hair Salon



JAMES JOSEPH SALON

SALONS ARE to Newbury Street what coffee houses are to Seattle. And that's not to mention all the great options elsewhere in our fair city. Needless to say, competition for this award was stiff. But after weeks of research, considering quality of cuts and color, industry knowledge, stylist training, staff attitudes, atmosphere and décor, one nominee stood out. James Joseph Salon, a sunny, 2,100-square-foot loft with exposed brick walls, has it all. Owner William George, who's the epitome of professional, focuses exclusively on quality hair services—and it shows. His stylists go through two years of basic training as apprentices, and continue with monthly workshops and seminars throughout their tenure. Hence the seldom empty chairs and the happy, silky-haired customers. 30 NEWBURY ST., BOSTON, 617-266-7222, WWW.JAMESJOSEPHSALON.COM

BEAUTY BOUTIQUE

C.O. Bigelow Apothecary

DO YOU FLIP over cucumber facemasks, vanilla body scrubs, eucalyptus shaving soaps, cherry-soda lip balms and coconut pomades? Flex your muscles, because you'll walk out of this shop loaded down with enough treats to send serotonin levels skyrocketing. The sales staff are solicitous and knowledgeable, and there are a ton of trendy brands, including 100% Pure, Patricia Wexler, M.D., and Prada Beauty, plus Zirh and Proraso for men. We also love their private-label products, on which they often run specials. Copley Place, Boston, 617-236-7257, WWW.BIGELOWCHEMISTS.COM

Cor Soap

SOMETIMES WE stumble upon a product we can't keep to ourselves. Thankfully, Doreen Hing and Jennifer McKinley at Plank Designs, headquartered in Charlestown, felt the same way. Known for their sassy yoga gear, the women decided to market a little-known soap they couldn't stop gushing about. Although it looks like a plain old bar of glycerin, Cor contains silver, an antibacterial, and other natural ingredients like marine collagen and silk protein to clear up those unsightly blemishes. BIKINI WAX
Anne-Cecile Curot-Park at Bella Santé

A BIKINI WAX can be painful and anxiety-inducing, but Curot-Park makes the experience as close to pleasant as possible. Bella Santé's setting is plush and Curot-Park's manner is charming, gentle and efficient, encouraging you to sit back and relax. You can rest assured that she knows what she's doing: She trained in Paris, where her career got going, then worked in Switzerland and New York City. She's been at Bella Santé for nearly three years, where she uses lavender Poetic Wax, followed by tweezing, and finishes with tea tree oil lotion to eliminate bacteria and breakouts. 38 Newbury St., Boston, 617-424-9930, WWW.BELLASANTE.COM

BROWS & LASHES
Michaud Cosmedix

BANISH BUSHY BROWS that make you look like an extra from Planet of the Apes with a visit to Julie Michaud at Michaud Cosmedix. In her pretty but unfussy space, decorated like a lady's sitting room, Michaud puts her prowess as a plucker at your service, cleaning and taming your eyebrows to complement your face. The arch she creates using tweezers (she waxes for clients who can't withstand the pain) makes eyes look a lot brighter. While you're at it, why not add some pop to your peepers? Michaud also does lash extensions (so natural, so lush, and they can last for several weeks with proper care), false lash applications (including ones sprinkled with rhinestones) and micropigmentation (cosmetic tattoos applied with a little pen). Now you're set for some high-impact flirting. 69 Newbury St., Boston, 617-262-1607, WWW.MICHAUDCOSMEDIX.COM

COSMETICS COUNTER
Bloomingdale's

IF YOU HARBOR affection for the cosmetics at Bloomies on 59th and Lex, you'll love the Chestnut Hill counter, expanded from 5,000 to 14,000 square feet as part of a larger renovation to the department store. The energy is cosmopolitan but uncrowded, with oodles of promotions and expert assistance proffered by both trendy guys in artsy glasses and career makeup mavens. We love the black-and-white checkerboard-style floor, the spacious, open feel and original artwork. Fragrances inhabit their own distinct space, complete with a fragrance specialist. Bloomies carries 26 lines of cosmetics, including new additions SKII, Giorgio Armani and Philosophy, plus skincare and hair care lines, such as NV Perricone, M.D., and Frederic Fekkai. The bonus? Three treatment rooms where aestheticians administer complimentary facials. The Mall at Chestnut Hill, Chestnut Hill, 617-630-6000, WWW.BLOOMINGDALES.COM

Exhale

OFFERING THE BEST day-off from the hectic pace of city life, Exhale helps you refocus on your wellness. Going beyond mere pampering and primping, they'll help you find a harmonious balance of mind, body and spirit. Their approach is active and multidisciplinary, combining exercise with spa therapies. Group-class offerings include yoga and core fusion, which is a blend of yoga and pilates. Along with massages, facials and body treatments, which incorporate the latest technological advances like cool lasers, Exhale's services also include nutrition coaching, cupping, reiki and acupuncture by experienced practitioners. EXTENSIONS
Salon Mone't

GO GAMINE one day, Rapunzel the next. Everyone's doing it, from pop princesses to Oscar royalty. But you don't need to walk the red carpet to lengthen your locks. Pop into Salon Mone't on Newbury Street, where they specialize in every type of hair extension—strand-by-strand, sewn-in, bonded. Owner and former music video show host Shellee Mendes asserts that Bostonistas love their extensions. These days, they look au naturel, so no one needs to know your little secret: The salon's clients run the gamut, from little old ladies to local news reporters. 176 Newbury St., Boston, 617-425-0009, WWW.HAIRSALONMONET.COM, WWW.BOSTONHAIREXTENSIONS.COM

FACIAL
Brad Duncan at 30 Newbury Spa Inc.

A LITERAL MIRACLE WORKER, Duncan is a recent California transplant who has quickly earned legions of fans here. Devotees rave about the results of his gentle, relaxing facials. And face it: Results are all that count. Although he looks 25, Duncan has years of experience (his youthful appearance is a testament to his skills). He's extensively trained and uses almost exclusively Epicuren products, a line that was originally developed to treat burn patients and turned into a consumer product once doctors noticed how dramatically it improved skin's appearance. Apparently, the secret to its success is in the delivery system. While most beauty products rely on animal or plant enzymes to deliver nutrients, Epicuren has successfully mimicked human enzymes, so that skin recognizes it as its own. One client swears he gets compliments almost daily on his complexion. The spa itself, while perhaps not as glitzy as others on Newbury Street, boasts top-notch personnel, and when it comes to facials, Duncan is hands down the champ. 30 Newbury St., Boston, 617-266-7606, WWW.30NEWBURYSPA.COM

YOU'RE UNABLE TO BREAK away during the day for a haircut; by 5 you're famished; and you can't bear facing the beauty-starved, Saturday mobs. Thursday nights, however, are wide open. Hello, Avanti. With a relaxed party vibe, complete with tunes and sometimes treats, you can get a late-night haircut by a fully trained Avanti staffer (not a trainee in sight) for the reduced rate of 40 bucks. Run by recent BC grad Alfie Carranza, under the tutelage of owner and native North Ender Alex Iacobacci, the scene makes sense. Although most salons close by 7:15 pm, Avanti rocks on Thursdays till 11 pm. 11 Newbury St., Boston, 617-267-4027

EVERYONE WHO'S ANYONE works out at the Sports Club/L.A. With good reason. The surroundings are luxe, the technology cutting-edge, the services superior and the members so, well, fit. With 114,000 recently redecorated square feet, nary a machine, class, service or treatment has been overlooked. MAKEUP ARTIST
Coco Grace

IF YOU COVET Gwyneth's fresh-faced visage—porcelain skin, rosy cheeks, dewy lips—then follow the long line of natural beauty enthusiasts who flock to makeup artist Coco Grace. Although she also does gorgeous glam looks, Grace is the go-to girl for minimalist makeup. Welcoming us at the door of her cozy home studio (she also makes house calls), this former ballerina, with dark hair, pale skin and pretty features, inspires our immediate confidence. Sipping iced tea and nibbling organic cookies, we get down to business. An hour later we marvel in the mirror. A natural glow on the cheeks; a hint of color on the lips; an accented arch of the brow. We couldn't be happier. She sends us off with products from her signature line, and believe it or not, we're able to re-create the look the next morning. 617-277-7797, WWW.COCOGRACE.COM

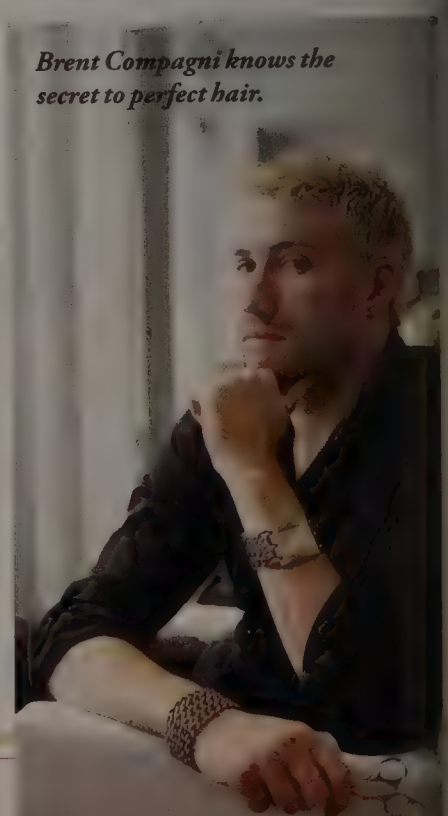
Donna Charloff at Beaucage Salon & Spa

A MARVELOUS MANI is a matter of perfect balance. Service that's efficient but individualized in a setting that's neither chichi nor charmless, from someone who's both skillful and respectful of the client's desires; and of course, perfect polish in every way. That description matches the experience Charloff offers at Beaucage Salon and Spa. With 15 years as a nail technician at this top-notch salon, she's a dream, whether you're a lady who lunches, a well-groomed professional or a mom looking for some peace. We take our gloves off to her. 71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-7171, WWW.BEAUCAGE.COM

MASSAGE
Natalie Maibenko at El Coco International Salon & Day Spa

WE LIKE IT HARD and deep. But don't mistake that for a no-frills experience, please. We want it all—strong hands and ambiance. That's why Maibenko at El Coco, an Aveda salon and spa on the edge of Quincy Market, is tops in our book. This pretty Eastern European transplant is stronger than she looks. She communicates blissfully with your muscles, stretching, rubbing and applying deep pressure to just the right spots. As with all Aveda services, aromatherapy is key. Following a brief survey of your daily stresses and desires, Maibenko applies a potion of three essential oils to sooth your cares away. Hot scented towels, eyeshades and relaxing waterfall sounds are all part of the experience, too. A perfect blend of power and pampering. 24 North St., Boston, 617-720-4222, WWW.ELCOCO.COM

MEN'S HAIRCUT
Brent Compagni at Pini Swissa



WHEN WE VISITED owner Pini Swissa in his beautiful new eponymous salon, he let us in on a little secret. In Europe, he says, stylists are judged on their talent for cutting a man's hair. Anyone can make a woman with flowing tresses look gorgeous. But making the most of a man's sheared locks, now that's skill. And it's one that Brent Compagni has perfected. He's been with the salon for under a year, but already he's cultivated a following of dedicated and well-groomed guys (including Swissa himself.) Compagni consults with clients on lifestyle and routines, and shapes their hair for a more confident demeanor overall. And the environment works for men wary of the salon experience. It's soothing, almost monastic, with white walls and antique furniture from Belgium. 18 Newbury St., Boston, 617-236-1727, WWW.PINISWISSA.COM

Tatyana Makaryan at Salon Trio

DON'T DRAG YOUR feet if you want to be summertime sandal-ready. Instead, tow your toes over to Salon Trio and let co-owner Makaryan beautify them. The atmosphere at Salon Trio is casual, with two chairs and one treatment room, yet quiet and private—a place where busy women allow themselves time to unwind. Makaryan's gentle hands and skilled techniques ensure you put your best foot forward. 115 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-0143, WWW.SALONTRIOBOSTON.COM

QUICKIE SERVICES
G Spa

WE KNOW YOU'VE done it. Ducked out midday for a quickie. No, not that kind. We're talking about a mani, pedi, wax or trim. But instead of basking in efficiency, you're a bundle of nerves, wondering if your absence at the office remains undetected. You should have gone to G Spa. The décor alone, all hot pink, lime green and mod white, is enough to lift your spirits, but combined with their fairly priced, superfast services, you'll feel absolutely giddy. They'll trim your bangs, streak your hair, rub your feet or cure your cuticles. And guys, they'll tame your beard, nip your nape or fix your unibrow. All in under 30 minutes, all without feeling rushed. How's that for service? 35 Newbury St., Boston, 617-267-4772, WWW.GSPA.BIZ

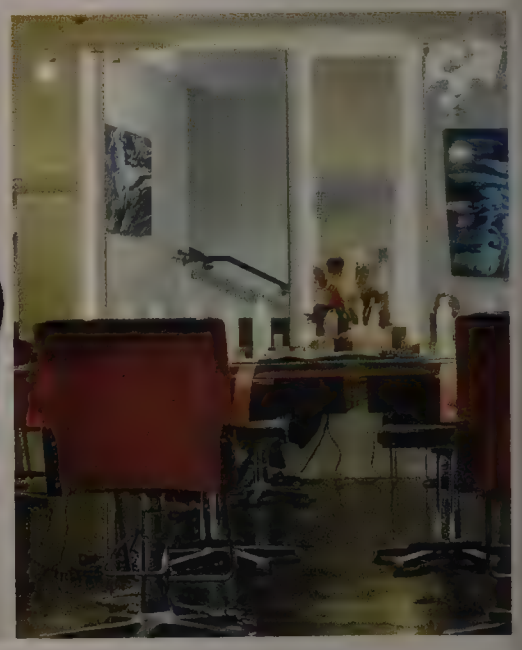
SUBURBAN SALON
id.Salon

WHAT DO YOU get when three Newbury Street stylists flee to greener pastures? An upscale salon with a breezy atmosphere, sans attitude. Once upon a time, Helen McKenna, Matthew Carlson and Shirley Ching, who met at a Newbury Street hair spot, did fancy, did attitude, did the scene. But after a while, it got old. As did their clients' complaints of prices and parking. The trio saw an opportunity to move out of the fray, and now their fans include not only suburbanistas, but city-dwellers, too. One high-profile design professional confides, "I look forward to my time there. It's friendly and warm. They happily send assistants to pick up lunch. It's a nice little escape from the city." 241 Washington St., Wellesley, 781-237-1233

SUNLESS TANNING
Perfect Tan

WHETHER YOU'RE IVORY-TONED or olive-complexioned, Perfect Tan can darken your natural shade as deep as you dare delve. They've got an automatic Mystic tanning booth (made famous by Friends and Hollywood celebs) and five types of lie-down units, but it's their airbrushing we love. They custom-blend a match for your particular skin tone, then spray it on everywhere. The booth is fitted with a filtering system and drying fans to ensure a comfortable experience. The overall space is clean, bright and welcoming, with lots of windows and skylights. And you can tan pretty much whenever you want, because they're open weekdays from 8 am to 11pm, with only slightly shorter hours on weekends. 1030 Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-713-0598, WWW.PERFECTAN.COM

UPDO
Janet Warner at Salon Marc Harris



WARNER LEARNED the art of the updo when "sets" were required skills at beauty school. But in our opinion, neither precision cuts nor blow-drying techniques signal old-fashioned Hollywood glamour like buns and French twists do—just check out all those red-carpet coifs. While she still gets requests for perfect princess hair by Cinderella brides, today's looks are softer, wavier and looser. But despite their studied casualness, her updos always hold tight, making them a best bet at parties where you plan to get down. One client even wore hers to brunch the next morning. 30 Newbury St., Boston, 617-262-2222, WWW.SALONMARCHARRIS.COM

WELCOME ADDITION
Equinox Fitness

EQUINOX DOESN'T SWEAT the small stuff. The brand-new, over-40,000-square-foot space looks sleek and clean. There's no carpet; showers are outfitted with ipe wood grates; and the décor, with its glass tiles and terra cotta colors, echoes Back Bay architecture. Six studios, including yoga, pilates and cycling, and high-energy classes get their members' hearts pumping. We love the Wi-Fi lounge, juice bar/café, spa services and shop stocked with pieces by Stella McCartney and Lululemon. And although there's a kids' club, decked out with mini modernist furniture and colored computer keyboards, you'll never have to endure birthday parties or family days. Equinox is exclusively for grown-ups. 131 Dartmouth St., Boston, 617-578-8918, WWW.EQUINOXFITNESS.COM

WOMEN'S HAIRCUT
Mario Russo at Salon Mario Russo

AT THE RISK of stating the obvious, Russo is marvelous. He's got it all: handsome looks, European heritage, two plush salons (one on the first block of Newbury and the other in posh Louis Boston), his own product line, customer loyalty and charm. Oh, and he gives a great cut, too. Russo, who's been cutting hair for 26 years, trained in London at Vidal Sassoon and served as an apprentice in both Paris and Rome. He says the key to delivering a to-die-for cut is knowing how to give hair a good shape, then adding a personal touch at the end so it's customized for each individual. Although a veteran of the trade, he's on the floor almost every day and is constantly adding new clients to his roster, an impressive one that already includes celeb writers and TV personalities, plus superstars like Natalie Portman when they're passing through town. So we couldn't resist asking, what celeb cut is most coveted in Boston these days? Victoria Beckham's layered bob and Michelle Williams' new pixie cut, he says. Time to go short. 9 Newbury St., Boston, 617-424-6676; Louis Boston, 234 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-266-4485; WWW.MARIORUSSO.COM

A ROCK-HARD six-pack, bulging biceps, tight buns. Yum. Grunts and groans, sticky sweat, garlic breath. Ick. Never mind your own wobbly bits and red-faced agony. Skip the awkward mingling and work out where only women are welcome. With 35,000 square feet, Healthworks has all the perks of fancy coed fitness facilities—spacious studios, plentiful machines and bubbly whirlpools in the locker rooms. Unique classes include belly dance, nia (martial arts meets modern dance), punk rope (combines conditioning drills, jumping rope and core training) and forza (based on Japanese sword fighting). Healthful and handy, Healthworks also provides onsite childcare, a juice bar and spa services. DON'T BE intimidated by salespeople who won't take you seriously unless you're with your mother and a dozen bridesmaids on your first visit here—go directly to the top and ask for an appointment with owner Salwa Khoory. In the business for 23 years, she's a hands-on seamstress, so if you love the dress you've chosen but want a different sleeve, more lace, less skirt or a longer train, she can work magic to make it happen. She also keeps a stable of incredible needleworkers. They're connected to every well-known bridal designer, so bring in your magazines and they'll deliver your dream dress to you. BRIDAL FLORIST

Ilex

"MY WEDDINGS are very custom-tailored," boasts Ilex owner Andrew Anderson of his bridal floral work. "My goal is to say something about the style and taste of the bride and groom, so that their wedding will be a personal, rather than an Ilex, event." One bride asked Anderson to make her ceremony and dinner reception "soft," with a cocktail hour similar to a party at a chic Miami Beach hotel. For this design dichotomy, the talented South End floral creator floated contemporary, hard-edged chartreuse flower arrangements and candles in the swimming pool, but used soft, sweet, pastel-colored Victorian blooms for the book-ended ceremony and dinner. What the bride wants, the bride gets. 73 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-422-0300, WWW.ILEX FLOWERS.COM

NO COURTROOM PROMISES, but you just might wear these clean-lined dresses again after your friend's wedding. That's because they're not of the puce taffeta, puff-sleeved or overdone ruffled variety. J. Crew offers simple, cotton numbers for a beach wedding—in every pretty color you can imagine—in the merciful $165–$325 range. But don't head to their stores for these; J. BCBG Max Azria

FOR CITY WEDDINGS, BCBG Max Azria has halter and strapless dresses in slinky satin and viscose jersey for $128–$400. Some have discreet touches of sequins, beads and embroidery. But thankfully no gewgaws. Which is probably why the company doesn't call them bridesmaid gowns; they don't have to. Plenty of savvy brides are outfitting their maids in the ready-to-wear, cocktail collection. One current fave among Bostonians boasts a bubble skirt with pockets. Trendy at the altar is no longer an oxymoron. 71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-7182; Copley Place, Boston, 617-266-3141; WWW.BCBG.COM

BRIDAL HAIRSTYLIST

Leanna Chaney at Beaucage Salon

CHANEY LIKES to talk her bridal clients into updos and hairstyles that they wouldn't normally sport. "I tell them they wouldn't wear a wedding gown on an ordinary day either, so why not go for the special updo? Besides, it keeps the hair out of the way when everyone's hugging and kissing them." In her 18 years at the salon, she has watched long-term clients go from being single to in love (some have even brought in their man to meet her), to being married with a fabulous hairstyle that she's created for them on their wedding day, in or outside of the salon. "A lot of brides take their veils off at the reception," she notes, "so the hair had better look good." With Chaney, it always does. 71 NEWBURY ST., BOSTON, 617-437-7171, WWW.BEAUCAGE.COM

WEDDING CAKES

Le Beau Gâteau

IT'S ONE OF MANY memorable wedding moments—the bride and groom affectionately feeding each other cake. That is, until the groom gets frisky and smears the bride's nose. She comes back with a buttercream roundhouse to the chin, and it's on. Since you know you'll be licking fondant from your face before the reception ends, why not make it delicious? Le Beau Gâteau meets with clients months in advance for a sampling session where they can choose from among Erika Bruce's specialties, including European-style genoise, sponge and chiffon. Bruce, a former Rialto pastry chef and Cook's Illustrated editor, doesn't shy away from customized flavors and designs. She'll even work with themed weddings to create an appropriate masterpiece, because nothing says "I do" better than a pirate ship cake. And if there's a fussy eater in the crowd, Le Beau Gâteau offers side cakes for lower prices per serving. But we're pretty sure the main attraction will be a hit. In fact, you might want to think twice before wasting any of it in a food fight.

GIFT TREND

Donations Made to the Bride and Groom's Favorite Charities

WE ALL HAVE too much stuff—even some of us who're marrying for the first time but inheriting Mom's silver and Dad's furniture. What a generous idea to specify in your invitation that money for your gift should instead be sent in your name to the American Red Cross, the American Cancer Society or any of the many other groups that need it. This is especially meaningful if it's your second or third marriage. And c'mon, it's better than receiving a handful of serving platters you'll never use.

PLACE TO GET ENGAGED

Boston Harbor Islands

OK, THE MALDIVES would be more exotic. But for practically nothing, except a half hour of travel time, you could be on any of these 34 islands within Boston Harbor to pop the question. From May to October, there are even free water shuttles and ferries between some of them. You can propose at the oldest lighthouse in the country—Boston Light at Little Brewster, built in 1716—and the Coast Guard will help set the mood by making sure your boat's the last of the day and your group the final one there. They're so accommodating that if you want to stash a bouquet of flowers, they'll do that as well. The only thing Coast Guardians won't do is hold onto the ring. Their insurance doesn't cover accidentally dropping it into the harbor. Incidentally, if you want to return for the nuptial festivities, Thompson Island, run by Outward Bound, can cater the reception. 617-223-8666, WWW.BOSTONISLANDS.ORG

RINGS FOR MEN
Tesorino Gallery

SOME MEN won't even wear wedding rings, but those who're willing to proclaim their attached status before (can you say man-gagement?) or after the license is valid will benefit from the handsome colored-enamel and sterling, or enamel and 18-karat gold, bands designed by Alessandro Barellini of Florence for Idrus Ext. They're $95–$195 in silver and $750–$950 in gold. And your guy may appreciate the fact that Barellini's red rings are the same red—in fact the very same enamel—used on Ferraris. Just don't tell him what the late poet Dorothy Parker said when she received a perfect rose: "Lovely, but I'd rather have one perfect Cadillac." 70 Charles St., Boston, 617-742-0061, WWW.TESORINOGALLERY.COM

SPA WEDDING PACKAGE Emerge

EVEN THOUGH they're located in the city's center, Emerge's huge four floors, fireside lounge and outside roof deck make you feel removed from the cares of the world. There's enough room for a bridal party of a dozen bridesmaids and two mothers-of to get their hair done all at the same time. And the groom, groomsmen and dads can make use of the flat-screen TV and "manly" pedicure throne. The whole party can enjoy mimosas and a catered brunch, while the bridal couple repair to the private Hydro Storm for 15 minutes of steam and aromatherapy. Bridal groups "come in here for hours on the wedding day," notes special events coordinator Erica Curtis of the one year-old sister spa of Giuliano up the street. 275 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-0006 WWW.EMERGESPASALON.COM

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

A LITTLE BOOK OF BIG IDEAS

In At Large and at Small, Anne Fadiman, a Harvard graduate now living in western Massachusetts, tackles many topics.

What a pleasure to hold this little hand-size book, and roam wide and deep across many realms. "The familiar essay" has been lamented as a disappearing gentlemanly art, but here Anne Fadiman embraces it. She brings together a leisurely, enticing combination of the personal and the literary, with portraits of colorful historical characters. Her topics range from an arctic explorer, to being a night owl, to an appreciation of that tripped-out poet Coleridge. "Mine is a sensibility gangrened with inner corruption," he wrote, but Fadiman admits to a high-minded schoolgirl crush on him nevertheless. It's fun to read her brief but charmingly discursive essay about writer Charles Lamb, born in 1775, "who knew how to seize eros by the throat." He lived mostly contentedly in his later years with his sister, even though in a time of insanity she had murdered their mother. Fadiman's chatty, quirky curiosity lets her meander with equal pleasure into her love of ice cream (eaten in bed) and coffee, which to this "loquacious workaholic" was almost her college major. She tells of some goats in the seventh century who ate the equivalent of coffee beans and cut capers, "gamboled convulsively, bleated fantastically." Obviously her own range is very broad.

HOE, HOE, HOE!

The Belmont Farm (34 Glen Road, Belmont) sells fresh corn. Other produce can be found at the Belmont Farmers' Market (Thu., 2–6:30 pm through October in Belmont Center).

Around the corner from Belmont's subdivided suburbia, as if emerging in the weird juxtapositions of dream, appears a spacious working farm. This land has been in one family for about 200 years and com prises a big 10-acre square. Local and national organizations have helped preserve the beautiful spo which is planted and tended, in a cross between gardening and farming, by several people, includin one man who has been involved for 70 years. A barn, rebuilt with an old chimney in the middl houses some old, working tractors from 1938—to little boys' delight—which "sleep here," as own Henry Ogilby puts it. They're antiqued in a pink shade, part of the farm's gentle flavor. With the cu rent emphasis on eating local fruits and vegetables, as opposed to commuter food that has been trudg in from afar, people buy shares (alas, all gone this season) and fill their buckets weekly. But you can fi some of this produce—beans, little pearl onions, Boston lettuce—at Belmont Farmers' Market. A you can come to the farm itself and buy corn, which is said to be celestial. It's open, in the leisure rural language of this place, "dawn to dusk."

FUTONS GROW UP, GO TO GRADUATE SCHOOL

Dream On (299 Prospect St., Cambridge; 617-864-6000; dreamonfuton.com) sells foldable beds, mattresses and clever children's furniture.

After 26 years, Dream On has moved to a spacious spot with parking, and their futons have accordingly evolved. Once somewhat dorm-roomy (i.e. inexpensive sleeping surfaces), they have matured into solid, stylish sofa beds. But they retain the same three ingredients: a frame, made of slatted wood, some with broad arm rests; the futon itself, often containing thick, high-density foam; and the fabric. Dream On has hundreds of coverings, which slide on like a pillow case, and unlike cumbersome sofa slipcovers, these can be easily changed to fit the season. The coverings range from groovy tropical prints that you'd find embellishing a Hawaiian shirt to tapestry styles and cheery floral designs. The sofas can be pulled forward in a number of ways to create a bed. On some, the futon drapes over the back, like a jacket thrown over the shoulder. Others, reconfigured for the daylight hours, seem more like a long-legged, TV-gazing chair. The most chic looks here are the minimalist-modern sofas, spare metal structures covered with ultrasuede, inviting a wispy sprite to sit or drape herself across it. Extraordinary bedroom environments for kids are also featured.

Christiania Vodka presents

{ SEARED SEA BASS WITH MEDITERRANEAN POTATO SALAD with NORWEGIAN LEMONADE }

MIXOLOGIST: Kevin Durgin
RESTAURANT: District Lounge
180 Lincoln Street, Boston MA

"The Lemony base of the cocktail compliments the seared sea bass perfectly and is a refreshing kick to the Mediterranean potato salad that accompanies the entrée." —Andrew Brown

We believe very deeply that chefs should have the power to impact the complete dining experience. And that a perfectly crafted cocktail is the ultimate compliment to the best culinary dishes in Boston.

To this end, we propose Christiania Vodka as the perfect platform for these pairings. Christiania is six times distilled from organic Norwegian potatoes and pure Norwegian spring water. It's then charcoal filtered and aerated to eliminate all impurities. The result is The World's Smoothest Vodka™.

Every month, we choose a winning food pairing to be featured in this ad. Please send your submission to BostonPairings@christianiavodka.com. The deadline is the 15th of each month. The winner will be given a prize and have his/her pairing featured in this ad.

Venice Envy

The thrill is gondola...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Boats, whether rowed or sailed, remain picturesque fixtures on the Charles River in Cambridge, but Jody Adams thirsted for something different when she gazed at the water from the windows of her new solo venture.

"It's a new era for Rialto," Adams thought. "What can we do to make it special?" Well, nothing says "speciale" like a gondola ride, so on July 11 and 12, Rialto's annual wine barbecue features a raffle for just that on the Charles, as well as dinner for two. Venetian-style nibbles, Italian movies projected on a suspended piece of fabric and a "goofy" gondola ice-sculpture are added attractions at the two-night event. As Adams focuses her culinary efforts on dishes inspired by regional Italian cuisine, she's forged what she describes as a "collegial" partnership with Liborio Stellino, the Consul General of Italy in Boston.

"We want to put a [cultural] context around what we're doing," says Adams, who shies away from using the word "authentic." "I think it's a dangerous road to travel," she says. "This is New England, the ingredients are from New England. To make a real Venetian risotto, the recipe will say 'find a squid with an ink sac and take it out.' We get our squid ink in a jar." The adventure continues, as Adams will feature prix-fixe regional Italian menus that rotate monthly: "It's a region-of-the-month club!" she laughs.

Music: Moore of Mandy

Last year Mandy Moore showed us all just how much she's grown, starring as the Rachel to Vincent Chase's Ross on Entourage. (Her role was so convincing, we almost started to hate her for real, what with breaking Vince's heart and nearly sabotaging Aquaman and all.) But it's still hard to reconcile that TV turn with her pop-princess past. Fitting, then, that Moore should want to share her more mature musical side. She'll do just that July 16 at the Prudential Center's South Garden, one day before the release of her new album, Wild Hope, a mix of pop and folk. Victory! South Garden, Prudential Center, Boston. 12:30 pm. Free.

most expensive comedy ever made just goes to that money can't buy everything—especially aughs. This happily Jim Carrey–free sequel to 's horrendous Bruce Almighty does represent a improvement quality-wise, if only by virtue of rote and uninspired instead of grating and ob- us. The great comic actor Steve Carell finds elf stranded as a freshman congressman called by god (Morgan Freeman) to build an ark in ration for another flood. Inexplicably, the di- mission also requires Carell to grow a big, bushy l and try to wring giggles out of being pooped a variety of computer-generated animals. John lman costars as a crooked politician trying to our national parks, and thus Evan Almighty at- ts to cover as many demographic bases as possi- ucking up to environmentalists and the reli- right simultaneously. The filmmakers should've less time honing their talking points and more coming up with jokes, as this listless picture mirthlessly towards a pointlessly busy, F/X- conclusion. (At Boston Common, Fenway n the suburbs.)

astic Four: Rise of Silver Surfer ★

Lee and Jack Kirby's seminal '60s comic about sfunctional superhero family gets another my big-screen adventure. Ioan Gruffud, Jessica , Michael Chiklis and Chris Evans return as ps the least impressive cast ever assembled for mer blockbuster, again proving it's possible to ss some of the wildest cosmic powers in the rse, and still lack even an ounce of movie-star sma. This time around, the Earth is slated for uction by a malevolent alien named Galactus l, the mythic funnybook figure is here played by ud). There's a shimmering eunuch dude on a oard warning of destruction, but Gruffud's hy Reed Richards is awful busy planning his ling to Alba's Invisible Woman. As in 2005's astic Four, the problem here isn't just director Story's complete incompetence behind the ra. Lee and Kirby's Silver Age sci-fi philoso- ng also requires a retro cheese factor that's im- ble to conjure in such a modern, product-place- -riddled setting. Besides, we've already seen a ant F4 adaptation: It was called The Incredibles. Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

prisingly nifty and efficient little chiller, direc- ikael Hafstrom's lean adaptation of a Stephen short story stars John Cusack as a boozy hack r who investigates paranormal urban legends. wobbly wordsmith meets his match in the ted hotel room of the title, a fabled death suite e the guests don't usually have time to unpack e something horrific happens. Like most of 's recent work, the storyline is a muddled epodge of familiar elements, but Hafstrom car- t off with some cunning camera work and slick d effects, relying on muscular craftsmanship wicked sense of humor. Finally coming of age s 40s, Cusack seems to have at last outgrown his ted smug, hipster posturing. Following up on errific performance two years ago in Harold is' woefully underrated The Ice Harvest, our star drops the Lloyd Dobler self-regard and locates tary, slightly rotten pathos lurking beneath. d thing, as 1408 is basically a one-man show, Cusack's commitment to the material smoothes a lot of rough patches. (At Boston Common, ay and in the suburbs.)

d, crude and straight from the heart, writer-di- r Judd Apatow's follow-up to The 40-Year-Old stars Seth Rogen as an endearing, juvenile o who gets a little more than he bargained for a one-night-stand with an out-of-his-league kout played by Grey's Anatomy's Katherine l. It doesn't take a genius to map out exactly re Knocked Up is headed; sooner or later our will figure out the frog she slept with is actually nce, but first he'll have to put down the bong get up off the sofa. The chief pleasures of the are the bawdy humor and abundant warmth which Apatow carries his characters to their ous destination. In case the title didn't tip you dready, this is one terrifically raunchy movie, with R-rated banter and a pronounced fascina- with bodily functions. Yet a bright core of erosity shines through; perhaps not since re's Something About Mary has a comedy so ly maneuvered between scatology and sweet- . (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the rbs.)

Making Airwaves

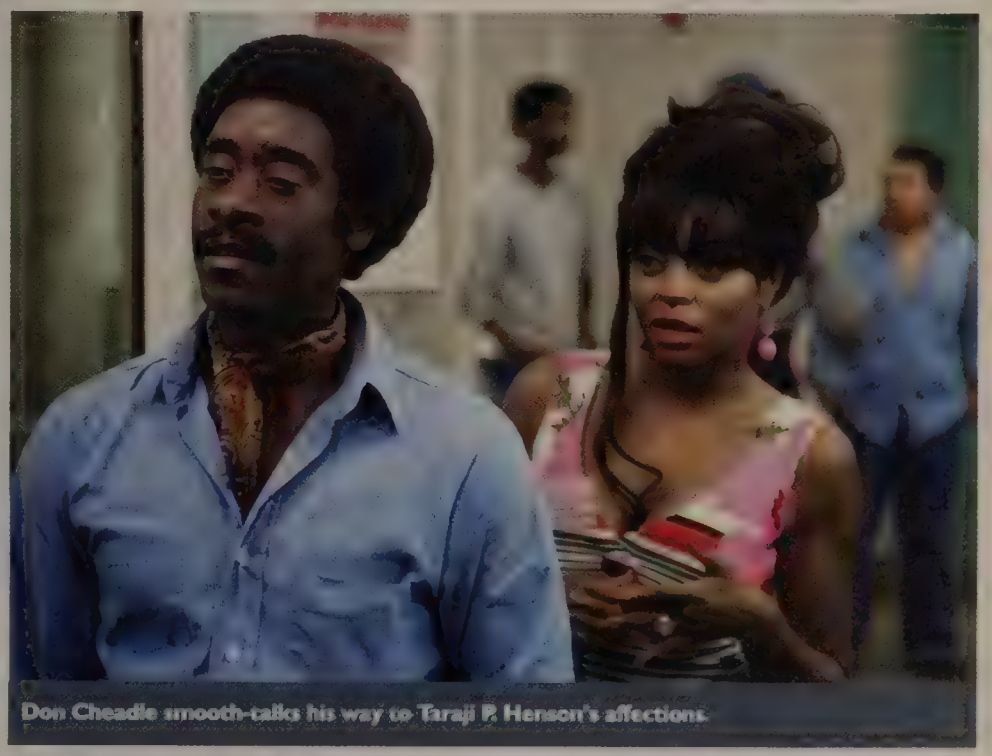
Don Cheadle scores another hit as a DJ in Talk to Me

BY SEAN BURNS

With his slight frame, timid voice and unerring knack for subtle inflections, Don Cheadle is one of those actors I'll happily follow anywhere. He's got a special and specific kind of star persona; a casual, everyman empathy. No matter how outrageous the character, his relaxed, genuine humanity keeps shining through. Perhaps I look forward to Don Cheadle movies so much simply because it's so enjoyable spending two hours in his company.

Like most folks, I first noticed Cheadle stealing scenes out from under Denzel Washington in Carl Franklin's too-little-seen 1995 noir Devil in a Blue Dress. As Mouse, our hero's psychotic sometime sidekick, he brought a startling delicacy and unexpected humor to a mad-dog killer. Cheadle's big moment in that film, sputtering and making excuses for an "accidental" murder with the guilty petulance of a child being called to the principal's office, heralded the arrival of a brilliant talent.

I'm still not sure what he's doing with that goofy cockney accent in those Danny Ocean movies, but it seems our immensely gifted actor has finally logged enough sterling supporting turns that he's at last been given a few leading-man roles (see Hotel Rwanda), which when you consider the rigid Tinsel Town caste system, represents quite an achievement for such an ordinary-looking black man in today's Hollywood.



Kasi Lemmons' rambunctiously entertaining Talk to Me gives this great actor another meaty part. Playing notorious Washington, D.C., disc jockey Ralph Waldo "Petey" Greene, Cheadle gets to growl out his lines in a sly drunken purr, rocking a variety of gigantic Afro-wigs, Superfly fashions and assorted emotional breakdowns, all while embodying a widely beloved, late-'60s, early-'70s counterculture hero. Rife with raunchy sex and substance abuse, the role is obviously the kind of slow pitch over the plate that most actors dream about, and Cheadle knocks it out of the park.

Sketched in the loud, bold strokes befitting a populist legend, Talk to Me finds newly paroled ex-con Petey bamboozling his way into an on-air audition for the morning slot at a D.C. soul station, confounding uptight owner Martin Sheen and accidentally severing the channel's tight ties with Hitsville U.S.A. by explaining to the listening public exactly why Motown's Berry Gordy ain't all that different from a street-corner pimp.

Greene just can't help calling them like he sees them, but luckily he's got rising corporate hotshot Dewey Hughes (Chiwetel Ejiofor) in his corner. An up-and-comer determined to get this moldy old station in sync with the tumultuous times, our smooth-talking suit envisions the foul-mouthed convict as a broadcasting breakthrough. If only he could get Greene to stop calling him "Mr. Tibbs!"

The unlikely friendship between Greene and Hughes provides Talk to Me with a sturdy emotional spine. Hughes' idolization of Johnny Carson and measured boardroom savvy represent a life Greene's been shut out from since the day he was born, and the latter's reckless monologues serve as a much-needed vicarious release valve for our well-spoken businessman. In many ways, the two men complete one another, which probably would've been a much more effective subtext if cowriters Michael Genet and Rick Famuyiwa didn't always make them come right out and say so to one another.

Hewing closely to the Good Morning, Vietnam/Private Parts template, the movie stages countless studio meltdowns and comic confrontations for maximum audience appeal. Cheadle's id commandeers the microphone while Ejiofor's superego fumes and does damage control in the background. Lemmons, who up until now has specialized in arthouse curios like Eve's Bayou and The Caveman's Valentine, helms the picture in square, popular Hollywood shorthand. Perhaps a better movie would've been a good deal more subtle, but it probably wouldn't be so much fun.

There is, however, one extraordinary sequence. The assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. sends D.C. into a blazing, rioting inferno, and an off-duty Petey Greene goes on the air, trying to wrestle some semblance of order to his town and at the same time share anger, outrage and grief with his listeners. Lemmons takes a step back from hustling along her plotlines and simply does what Greene did, playing Sam Cooke's "A Change Is Gonna Come" in its full three-minute-and-10-second-glory, allowing us to savor the extraordinary power of Cooke's lyrics and music, building to an emotional crescendo unlike anything else in the picture.

It's a scene that'll strike deep within the heart of anybody who still loves everything radio is supposed to stand for, despite the disastrous state of the industry. Our fragmented, iPod Shuffle status quo increasingly separates us from this sort of shared cathartic cultural moment. Despite Talk to Me's occasional broad sloppiness and larger-than-life scenarios, Lemmons pays heartfelt tribute to that almost-gone community of the airwaves. One nation, under a groove. IB

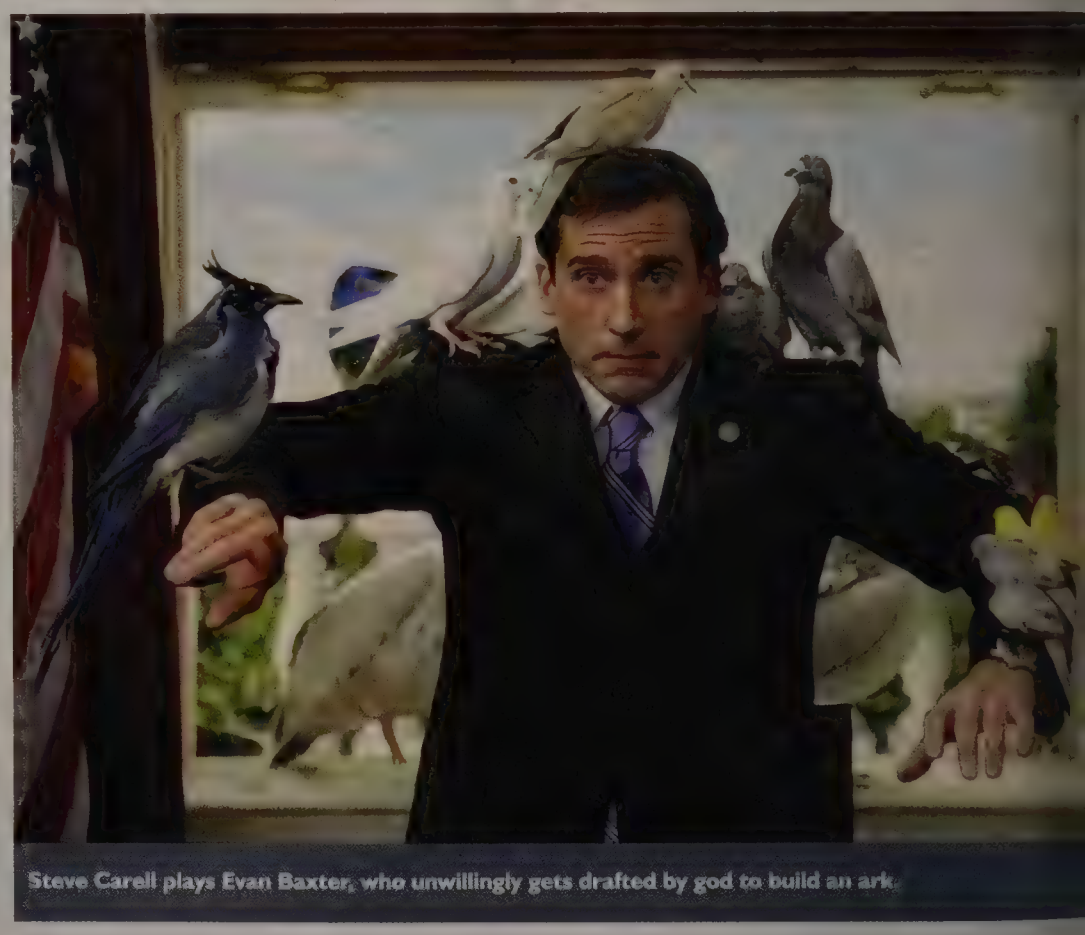
Live Free or Die Hard ★★
Bruce Willis' iconic cowboy cop John McClane gets a postmillennial makeover in this extremely tardy third sequel to the classic 1988 summer blockbuster standard-setter, brazenly pandering to a generation that was barely out of the crib when our haggard hero muttered his first "yippie-kai-yay." Stuffed silly with technobabble gobbledygook, Live Free or Die Hard pits McClane against a cabal of sinister, sleepy-eyed computer hackers aiming to shut down the Eastern seaboard. Honestly, is there anything duller than watching villains sit in front of monitors, typing? Stripped of his trademark F-bombs and cigarettes to preserve the precious PG-13 rating, Willis is saddled with a tweener-friendly kid-sidekick (Mac pitchman Justin Long) and winds up lumbering through the picture like an angry dinosaur, an aging '80s action relic lost in a brave new cinematic world of cartoony computer-generated stuntwork, bloodless shootouts, female ninja assassins, embarrassing Kevin Smith cameos, and entirely too many laptops and cellphones. Last year's rock-solid Willis-starring 16 Blocks felt more like a proper Die Hard sequel than this sloppily edited trend-chaser. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

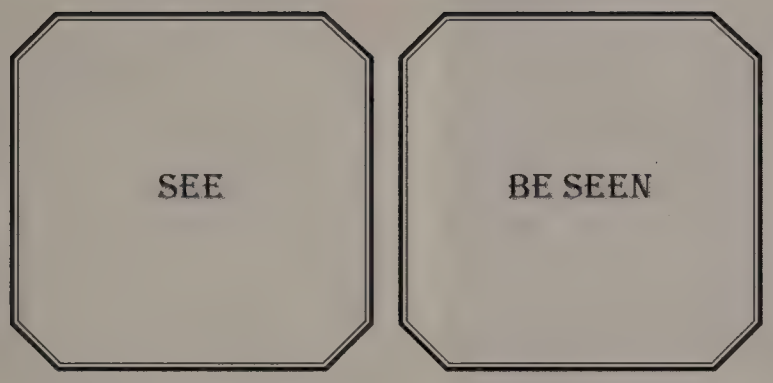
A Mighty Heart ★★★½
Playing the widow of slain Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl might seem like a prime opportunity for a star to indulge in some shameless capital-A "Acting" and probably land another Oscar for the mantle, but Angelina Jolie delivers a performance that's astonishing in its subtlety and control. It's a good fit for the movie, as director Michael Winterbottom deliberately avoids putting any sort of Hollywood gloss on this real-life tragedy. Following the example of Paul Greengrass' lacerating United 93, A Mighty Heart tells a horrible story with an awful outcome—proving that in such cases, perhaps the best and most respectful thing a filmmaker can do is simply lay out the facts as dispassionately as possible and try to stay out of the way. With a massive amount of methodical detail, A Mighty Heart charts just about every blind alley, dead end and bureaucratic stumbling block in the Pearl investigation. The filmmaking matches the restraint of Jolie's performance, with all emotional outbursts shot from either a discreet distance, or in almost total darkness. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)



Ocean's Thirteen ★★½
Such an easygoing, empty little piffle you'll probably already have forgotten it before you even exit the parking lot, director Steven Soderbergh's second sequel to his jaunty 2001 Rat Pack remake is the kind of movie you go see because the theater has air conditioning. Ditching the in-jokey, self-satisfied smugness that made 2004's Ocean's Twelve such a chore to sit through, this leaner, more business-like third installment sends George Clooney and Brad Pitt on a personal vendetta against Al Pacino's spray-tanned, Henna-haired casino boss. An absurd scenario to bankrupt the house is played out by the gargantuan supporting cast with Howard Hawks-ian professionalism and an emphasis on cool. Soderbergh jazzes up the proceedings with a dazzling array of smash-cuts, time-shifts, split-screens and vibrant splashes of color, using his astonishing command of cinematic grammar to successfully distract us from the fact that there's really not much going on here at all. Clooney and Pitt cruise along in a sort of ludicrously handsome second gear, with Matt Damon again doing most of the heavy lifting as their misfit protégé. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Once ★★★
This wildly overpraised, rough-around-the-edges Irish musical boasts some stray moments of genuine transcendence within a wobbly framework. Glen Hansard stars as a vacuum cleaner repairman, busking away on ratty Dublin street corners with a beat-up guitar and an ache in his soul. Marketa Irglova plays the flat-broke, piano-playing cleaning lady who takes his songs to heart, and somehow these two fumble their way around a mutual attraction while making some beautiful music together. Written and directed by John Carney, Once indeed boasts a unique and transporting power, but only while these two are singing. Wellsprings of repressed emotion burst through the lyrics, and the simple act of recording a demo tape somehow feels like a joyous communion of souls. Alas, whenever the music stops, not a heck of a lot rings true. Irglova's more of an underdeveloped male fantasy projection than an actual character, and the romanticized conclusion feels like a failure of common sense by all involved. Carney's low-fi, shaky-camcorder visuals too often mistake "ugly" for "gritty," but oh what sweet, sweet songs. (At Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Paris Je T'aime ★★
"I didn't have the time to write you a short letter," Mark Twain once quipped, "so I wrote you a long one instead." That thought came to mind more than once during Paris, Je T'aime, a collection of 18 quickie short films about romance in the City of Lights that finds a dazzling array of world-class feature directors belly-flopping hard when trying to keep things under 10 minutes. Brevity demands an entirely different skill-set, judging from the inane vignettes by Gus Van Sant and Children of Men's Alfonso Cuarón. (The less said about Nightmare on Elm Street helmer Wes Craven's ode to Oscar Wilde, the better.) Best in show goes to Sideways' Alexander Payne, whose first-person essay by an ugly American tourist approaches something stirringly close to transcendence. The Coen Brothers continue beating up Steve Buscemi with modestly amusing results. But the nicest surprise comes from Gerard Depardieu, who simply trains his camera on Cassavetes veterans Ben Gazzara and Gena Rowlands, letting these two old pros conjure a complicated history most full-length features couldn't approach. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)



Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End ★★
Visually wondrous and narratively discombobulated, this sense-deadening three-hour three-quel buries some striking, iconic visuals beneath such a tangled thicket of back-stabbing betrayals and such a muddled mish-mash of arbitrarily convoluted sea-chanty folklore, I had absolutely no idea what the hell was going on most of the time. Yes, Johnny Depp is back, even though he died in the second movie. Geoffrey Rush is also back, even though he died in the first movie. As expected from a Jerry Bruckheimer production, there are a lot of queasy ethnic stereotypes, along with the usual flag-waving and jingoistic pandering about "freedom," as if a pirate's life of looting and pillaging somehow equals democracy. Presumably the first Disney movie to ever open with the execution-by-hanging of a small child, At World's End juggles so many ludicrously over-elaborate shifting alliances and triple-crosses, it's hard to feel any affection for a cast composed of double-dealing snakes. Depp hams it up with extra vigor in multiple incarnations, seemingly acknowledging that the novelty of this particular performance already wore off a couple movies ago. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Ratatouille ★★½
It takes a certain amount of nerve to fashion a fantasy about a rodent in a kitchen, and so writer-director Brad Bird must be commended for his chutz in telling the animated tale of Remy (voiced by great standup-comic Patton Oswalt), a rat with guided dreams of someday becoming a gourmet c The film's central gimmick, which takes too lon set up and doesn't make much sense, has Remy den beneath the hat of loose-limbed garbage Linguini (Lou Romano), where he can control lad's movements by tugging away at random stra of hair. Ratatouille has all the visual razzle-da we've come to expect from those mad geniuse Pixar Animation Studios, with unbelievable at tion paid to every last bristle in Remy's fur, and eral wide-screen Paris skylines more beautiful t actual photographs. And yet the material f strangely one-dimensional, geared more towards kids' table than to a universal audience. (At Bos Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Steve Carell plays Evan Baxter, who unwillingly gets drafted by god to build an ark.

Shrek the Third ★½
I remain mystified by the appeal of these awful tures. Maybe it's the murky colors and putty slapdash animation, or perhaps just my pers aversion to the lazy anachronisms and insta dated pop-culture references employed by t screenwriters in lieu of actual, you know, jo Whatever the case, this listless third installme the grouchy green ogre's misadventures lacks the ergy to even be as annoying as its predecessors. movie just lies there like a bump on a log. M Myers again ladles on a hacky Scottish accent, ping with self-regard, going through the mot while Shrek faces impending fatherhood, ca troubles and a midlife crisis; stuff that's doubtl fascinating to the children in the audience. E Murphy and Antonio Banderas try valiantly to vide comic relief, a tough gig when you don't any punchlines. Justin Timberlake joins the tea a young "Artie" Pendragon, but the movie even muster enough interest in Arthurian leger go anywhere with this promising idea. It's just gish, droopy and dead. (At Boston Common a the suburbs.)

Sicko ★★
Alas, the ever-exasperating Michael Moore ha turned to bleat for our attention once again, as burying his good intentions and some very points in an easily dismissed pig-pile of cheap-s misguided allegations, factual sleight of hand an typical galling brand of gimcrack demagoguery. is probably Moore's least divisive film, but it's als sloppiest and most redundant. Basically a half- movie repeated four times, Sicko intercuts ho homegrown HMO stories and some startling A can statistics with the filmmaker's happy jaunts seas, where apparently all the government-run ical facilities are pristine palaces, and nobody has to wait in line. As expected, Moore offers n tual information as to the inner workings o health care systems in Canada, Britain, Franc Cuba, just a lot of entirely anecdotal, laughably colored snapshots, repeated long past the point of tedium. Much like his nemesis, George W. Bush, Moore reduces complicated issues to childishly simplistic sound bites, seeing only black and white in a world that's shades of grey. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Waitress ★★★
Already shaping up to be the summer's sleeper hit, the directorial debut by indie-movie darling Adrienne Shelley has a loopy comic charisma that feels both ingratiating and unique. Former Felicity star Keri Russell delivers an unexpectedly sassy and endearing turn as a long-suffering, put-upon waitress in a small-town pie diner, aghast to discover that she's been impregnated by the whimpering, abusive lout of a husband (Jeremy Sisto) she was planning to leave. Some big decisions loom on the horizon, but first comes an awkward affair with her ob-gyn (the pricelessly deadpan Nathan Fillion). Waitress is a small, screwy crowd-pleaser, full of exaggerated accents and quirky interludes, and it's largely carried off by some tart, pitch-perfect performances. Scenes are stolen left and right by Curb Your Enthusiasm's terrific Cheryl Hines, and Shelley herself appears as a mousy wallflower. But the best of the bunch is Andy Griffith, playing a curmudgeonly customer full of cheerfully delivered insults and downbeat sentiments. His happy-go-lucky fatalism epitomizes this scrappy picture's rough-hewn charm. (Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Dear to Dream

Elvis Perkins evokes family tragedy in neo-folkie impressionism

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Elvis Perkins deftly creeps into one's consciousness with the slow-swirling buildup of "While You Were Sleeping," the opening song of his often transcendent debut Ash Wednesday. First comes his delicate folk-styled guitar, then lightly throbbing string bass and shuffling drums, until woozy horns and a bowed saw conjure a cerebral cabaret feel.

Likewise, Perkins' stream-of-consciousness lyrics build to the haunting lines: "Were you falling, were you flying, and were you calling out, or were you dying?" It's a chilling passage given that his photographer-actress mother, Berry Berenson, was on Flight 11 out of Logan Airport on Sept. 11.

More eerie is the realization that Perkins wrote that song even before his mother left on that ill-fated trip—although he had already lost his father, actor Anthony Perkins (famed for his leading role in Alfred Hitchcock's Psycho), to AIDS nine years before that.

Wyndham Boylan-Garnett, Nicholas Kinsey, Elvis Perkins and Brigham Brough

"I'm not convinced of the linear nature of time as we've declared it to be," says the singer-songwriter, 31. "I'm open to the idea that the future is known at all points if we have mind to access it. So when I think of these songs or of time or my life, I don't see any straight arrow to it or a clear story. Like that song, I could still be writing it now, and it could be a song for the future and not the past." He pauses. "We're treading into dangerous waters."

Certainly the pall of Sept. 11 derailed his efforts to complete songs for what would become Ash Wednesday. "I don't really have any luck trying to retrace that time in any sort of logical fashion," says Perkins, who wrote the obliquely mournful title track of his album-to-be several months later, after overseeing the fumigation of his parents' L.A. home on Ash Wednesday. "Songwriting is just an extension of life—my life—and certainly anything that I see and feel or I've heard or listened to finds its way into it."

As such, Perkins also reflects such influences as listening to Simon & Garfunkel and Cat Stevens, studying classical guitar and sitar, and writing poetry. His brother Osgood plays drums on Ash Wednesday in addition to acting, as their Hollywood parents encouraged creativity. "I remember a lot of singing filtering around the house, and the piano had a charm that had its effect on me," says Perkins, whose father recorded standards for Epic Records as a pianist.

"Piano lessons were suggested by my folks, but I don't remember ever asking for them," Perkins says. "I chose, though I don't remember how or why, to play the saxophone, which had its moments but didn't last very long." Finally he followed a friend's lead and took guitar lessons from Prescott Niles, bassist for the Knack, the power-pop group known for its 1979 hit "My Sharona."

"I don't remember thinking too much about career choice when I was first doing music," says Perkins, who admits that it took a long time to find his own voice and direction. "It was something that I loved to do."

When he finally set about making a CD with his friend Ethan Gold arranging and producing, they looked to Van Morrison's Astral Weeks as a model for its dreamy blend of folk, rock and jazz. Gold even contacted some of its musicians. "There was talk for a minute of making my record with these guys," Perkins says. "For better of worse, that didn't happen." However, drummer Gary Mallaber, a veteran of subsequent Morrison classics, plays on the CD's first two tracks.

More importantly, Ash Wednesday includes contributions from drummer Nicholas Kinsey and bassist Brigham Brough. Along with keyboardist-guitarist Wyndham Boylan-Garnett, they now comprise the group Elvis Perkins in Dearland. "When it came to naming the band," Perkins says, "I sort of felt like doing away with the 'such and such and the so and sos' and decided to use the word 'in' instead of 'and,' to make the band something of an environment or an atmosphere in which I exist and operate, and the songs are given new life."

In turn, the quartet transforms the simpressionistic songs of Ash Wednesday with flexible instrumentation, injecting harmonium, marching drum and bells. "Mostly we just use what we have around," Perkins says from upstate New York. "It's somewhat of a haphazard, organic evolution that we've undergone with these people and these tools."

It's a sound adaptable to Outerland on Martha's Vineyard July 27, the Dunkin' Donuts Newport Folk Festival Aug. 5 and the Museum of Fine Arts Aug. 8.

"I don't feel like I'm very much a part of the indie-rock club," admits Perkins, who says his parents named him Elvis just because they liked the name. "It makes as much sense to be doing folk festivals, museums and island shows." iB our brother was a businessman, philanthropist, friend, son, and above all a concerned citizen. He died June 2, 2003 of complications from Multiple Myeloma Cancer; he was 49.

One of the last gifts Michael left on this earth, was to help create, organize and name a charity bicycle ride where 100% of the money raised went to AIDS prevention, treatment and care. Although Michael never lived to see this dream a reality...It is!!!!!

Through Michael's vision; and countless concerned volunteers' efforts: THE HARBOR TO THE BAY AIDS CHARITY BIKE RIDE is now a reality.

Since it's inaugural ride in 2003 the RIDE has raised over $600,000.00 donated to Fenway Community Health Services, Aids Support Group of Cape Cod and Community Research Initiative.

The 68 or 125 mile (fully supported) one day bike ride starts in Boston and finishes in Provincetown...but the ride is only the beginning...the real finish line is Michael's, and all of humanities, dream/vision – a world without HIV/AIDS!

Until that time THE HARBOR TO THE BAY ride will continue to help raise funds that are earmarked 100% to help educate, treat and care for those affected by AIDS.

Thank you,
Mark Tye & Randy O'Brien

BY ROCKIE GARDINE

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

One of the joys (and advantages) of being a Moon Child is that every new moon gives you, more than the rest of us, an opportunity to drop what isn't working and start anew. So if the wish you made at your birthday dinner hasn't materialized, try again during the Cancer new moon. And at every other new moon until you get what you want. Changing your mind a lot? While Mercury is still in your sign (until Aug. 4), you're being urged to become familiar with the broad boulevards and dark alleys the little guy is leading you down.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Summertime and the living is easy for Leos who don't have to juggle more than one group of friends at a time. For the rest, the next few weeks could turn into a three-ring circus complete with the unexpected arrival of a carload of clowns. If you're currently planning a birthday celebration, you'll need more than excellent managerial skills; unpredictable Uranus, by concentrating his attentions on your sun ruler, can suddenly change whatever you have in mind. Let's hope it also inspires a novel use of your creative powers.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Sulking because your Mercury ruler hasn't taken you anyplace exciting, let alone trouble-free lately? Well, slow and same-old is what you usually get when Mercury is retrograde. However, not only did the Messenger finally face forward this week, but vivacious Venus is in the process of dropping the glitter she wears during her trip through Leo for the tasteful wardrobe preferred by Virgo. The goddess begins her on-again, off-again visit to your sign on July 14. People get ready; the brain is percolating, the stylist is waiting.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

"Just when you think you're out of it, they pull you back in." Sound familiar? That's the feeling you're liable to get as your Venus ruler prepares to exchange the attention-grabbing behavior of Leo for the demure demeanor of Virgo. However, just a few short weeks into the Virgo transit, Venus turns retrograde and spends August and September revisiting old ground. That's why what you've been doing and whom you've been doing it with over the past few weeks are important. Chances are you'll be doing more of it.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Sensitive water signs are still getting the best deal, experiencing the easiest transition, sharing the most heartwarming moment. Whether these benefits will last past the sun's departure from Cancer depends a lot on your Mars coruler. While the Warrior God marches through your Taurus house of significant others, it motivates people you consider your allies as well as your antagonists. Since someone will probably stir up a shit storm during this bi-annual transit, think back. From August 2005 to February 2006, what were you up to?

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Since a wise Centaur would never sign a binding piece of paper while Mercury is retrograde, now that the Messenger is facing forward again, you may ask, "Is it safe?" It'll be safer to wait until the 14th, when the new moon in your Cancer house of agreements, investments and other people's money initiates a new lunar cycle. This is also the time when amenable Venus enters your Virgo career zone and begins to offer the kind of opportunities you won't find too hard to take. What you can't do, however, is ignore her offerings.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

A new chapter in one of your close relationships begins with the Cancer new moon in your marriage house. Wait to see what a significant (for now) other comes up with before you jump to any sort of conclusion. It's going to be a long, hot summer, with more rethinking beyond what comes out of the latest Mercury retrograde. The Messenger will continue wending its way through Cancer, scheduling meetings with lawyers and agents, future business partners and ex-spouses for the rest of July. Which is when Venus' six-week retrograde trip begins.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Don't assume that because romantic Venus is leaving you Leo house of partners on the 14th that you're going to lose that loving feeling. Uh, uh. Venus makes a comeback in August and September, thereby extending the issue being discussed now between you and your partner almo until the day the next Mercury retrograde begins. Meanwhile, be prepared to deal with a not-so-negligible amount of turmoil created by Mars' visit to the house where you, or your parents, live. Because muscular Mars in Taurus, I'd guess garden work or construction.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Once again, you may luck out because the Cancer new moon takes place in your house of romance, recreation and risk. Since Cancer, another witchy water sign, is rule by the moon, your chance of succeeding with a brand-n venture during this lunation is greater than the others. Well, maybe not the Pisces new moon. Just remember to trust your creative impulse and gut reaction. The inform tion you might need to succeed should come now that Mercury has resumed its forward march through the Crab's corner of the zodiac.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Go on tour. The hottest times could come while you're out there, far from home, seeking a change of scenery or a dif ferent social scene. Trust that affectionate Venus and passionate Pluto hooking up in the two other fire signs will direct some of the heat they're generating to eager Aries natives. Meanwhile, since the Cancer sun is nudging a domestic matter closer to resolution, you won't have to h around to see it through. Besides, your participation will probably boil down to throwing some money at the probl

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

It can't be emphasized enough. Having courageous Mars your sign, if only until early August, can provide all the nerve you need to take the next step, to break through r imaginary or self-imposed barriers. Shortly after Mercur turned direct on the 9th is a good time to reconsider the financial ramifications of the situation and budget accor ingly. Just be sure that what you're trying to achieve is rooted in the sort of reality, not a romantic or ideal-driv pipe dream, a flower-sniffing Bull is comfortable living i

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Mercury's change of direction can provide a fresh persp tive on a crucial matter you've been mulling over while your ruling planet was retrograde the past three weeks But until the 24th, when the Messenger clears the shad it's been under and you receive new information from a fresh face, don't count on taking a giant step forward. However, as the Cancer new moon cycle begins in your house of assets and acquisition, take a moment to envi sion what you'll do when you do get permission (from powers that be) to take that step.

Bye-Bye, Booty Call

will never understand why you just isappeared on me after the great ates we had—part of me thought aybe you got in an accident on your ay home from the weekend trip, ut your phone is still in service, so pparently you were just too much of wimp to call and be honest about hatever it is that happened. I can't elieve I thought to give you a second nance after what happened the first me—you were saying all the right ings to use me as someone to date ntil the next girl came along. You're sexy singer in a band... and oops, ou have a girlfriend. Stop texting me; e aren't going to have that late-night ndezvous. Either I have incredibly ad taste in guys, or I'm just having a ng string of really bad luck with dat- g. Where are all the good guys hid- g in this city? I'd say I'm a pretty od catch—so it shouldn't be this ard, right? Anyone care to shed some ght on this?

hat's how you signed your e-mail to e after our fourth date, when you eren't feeling ready to make "the nd of commitment [I] deserve." Well u were "committed" enough to ake out with me quite heavily on my uch on date no. 3. A week later, hen I said I couldn't sleep with you t and told you why, you ended our lationship. You would only e-mail me e next day in clinical terms that it s over. You talk the talk of your so- lled mental health profession, but u don't walk the walk in your life. I ver asked you to be my therapist— n angry because I let my guard wn and you're a hypocrite and a ward. Mostly, though, I'm hurt. I alize you were hit with a ton of icks, but how do I reconcile the ny things you said during our time gether with the fact that, after my nesty, all that disappeared from ur mind/heart? You came to the nclusion that I am my past. It all me down to your final words: "I'm t up for being a partner of a sur- vor." I'm here to inform you that n much more than a survivor (not a victim). You say you'd like to continue to be friends with me? How do you define "friend"? I can't fathom a friend who's unable to accept or understand my truth, who can't see past his penis in order to see and know all of me, including a part of me that has been touched by a huge tragedy that I never signed up for. Good luck to you in finding a partner who'll satisfy you in a relationship. You've lost out.

Sleepless in South Bay

I'm looking for some pen pals to correspond with. I've made some mistakes in life that I'm paying for, but it doesn't make me a bad person. I was a sick person who suffered from addiction, which I'm working on now. I'm a good person with a good heart. I'm 36 years old, 170 lbs with brown hair and blue eyes—and handsome, I must say. Write with advice or just to say hello.

Three's Great Company

To Mandi, Molly and Christina, Playing hooky on Monday with you at Short Beach in Nahant was riotous. Discussing the finer points of genital waxing by Elizabeth Grady over vodka lemonade and chardonnay could only be usurped by the creation of two nicknames for our high-maintenance girl Mandi: De-Mandi and Mandi-tory. Plunging in the numbing water every 25 minutes to relieve ourselves refreshed us just enough to encourage more cocktails and dinner at the Tides. Looking forward to our weekend in Winnipesaukee!

Dating in the Rain

It's on rainy days like this that I miss you most; I dream of holding you in my arms all morning, then going to Chinatown to pick up a bag of moules and some other exotic sea creature that doesn't even swim in the aquarium. We'd eat the steamers on my rooftop, straight out of the pot. The air would smell fresh and light after the afternoon rain, and there would be a bouquet of the freshest wildflowers on our picnic table that I picked for you on my way home. I'd look into your beautiful blue eyes and snap a picture of you smiling when you'd least expect it (those are my favorite pictures of you), and then you'd smile an even toothier one back at me. I'd think that the long, rainy day was happening so quickly, since long, rainy days always do when I spend them with you. As we watched the sun set, I'd hold your hand and feel how soft and warm your hand is in mine. And I'd have to tell you that I love you so much in that moment, but I wouldn't want to interrupt how perfect the moment is. I'd take a risk and lean in, brush your bangs behind your perfect little ear and whisper that I love you. You'd look at me and smile, and every worry that existed five seconds ago would now be completely gone; all that exists would be you and me and a beautiful sunset.

Peep Me in the Park

I've received your letters, and thoughts of you consume me every day. How do you manage to straddle the line between stubborn and adorable, just barely tipping on the side of the latter? Everything happened so quickly and we were so young then. But I miss you. Meet me at the park on our date in August; I promise I'll make it up to you.

—C

Hope to C You Soon

To the busty C behind the bar at Hogan's Run on Monday nights. I know I've been promising to check out your new gig at the granddaddy of dive bars. Unfortunately Mondays are now the only day of the week I don't drink. But I'll surprise you one of these days with a harem of cute men, pockets full of cash and an appetite for flat Budweiser drafts. We can crank butts on the back patio between games of pool and hot jams on the juke. Um, yup, go Hogan's!

REALITY DINING

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table – located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral – must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemutlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

HERE'S TO THE LADIES WHO LUNCH...

Cecil Beaton couldn't have done better, when the Emerald Necklace Conservancy transformed a tent on the Fenway into a scene straight out of My Fair Lady for their Party in the Park.

The décor was flower-show-on-steroids, and the event attracted the crème de la crème of the city's ladies (and a handful of gentlemen), who wore big picture hats to amp up the ambience.

Among them: arts booster Gabriella Beranek, the lovely Cassandra Irvine, real estate hottie and nightclub impresario Jennifer Epstein, party planner Jen Hawkins, brunette yummy mummy Alison Johnson, the swanlike Trevania Dudley Henderson, force of nature Molly Dunne, ballerina-turned-socialite Nina Fialkow, the unspeakably chic Lois Kunian, the supremely poised Olivia and Ursula Liff, who presented the award named for their mother (the late Parks commissioner Justine) to über do-gooder Diddy Cullinane, mover and shaker Wendy Shattuck, latter-day Louise Brooks Jane Roy and her sisters, Bea Roy and Ellen Herzfelder, the eternally foxy Marilyn Keane, stunning redhead Amy D'Ablemont Burns, head honchas Valerie Wilder of Boston Ballet and Anne Hawley of the Gardner Museum, iconoclastic glamazon Carolyn Campanelli, the preternaturally pretty Simone Winston, social arbiter Mary Kay Holder, drop-dead gorgeous photographer Nancy Friedman, philanthropist and unerring bullshit detector Susan Kaplan, the incomparably accomplished Marion Heard, restaurateur and sportswoman Debbie Lewis, and one woman who said to a friend, "I have a crush on your husband," to which the woman responded, "Me too... sometimes."

Because of the hats, air-kissing was de rigueur, and there were guided tours of the Museum of Fine Arts' Japanese Garden and the Kelleher Rose Garden (though there weren't many takers, due to the fact that high heels and gravel paths don't really mix).

During the hour or so before lunch, some guests unabashedly tossed back champagne, while others ostentatiously abstained, and conversations included one woman's remark, "I told my husband, if it's ever a choice between you and Martha's Vineyard, I'm picking the Vineyard," to which her friend replied, "I said that to all my husbands, and fortunately they took me up on it."

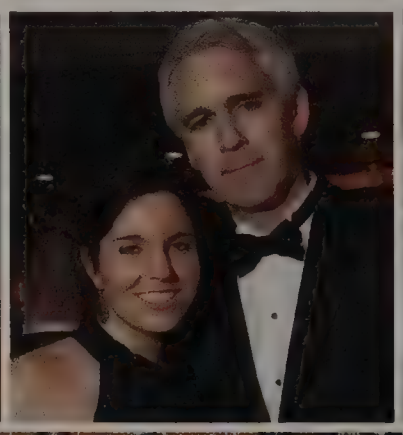
IT'S A JUNGLE OUT THERE...



There were several thousand plants and over a hundred monkeys (albeit stuffed), as well as sentient beings like a chinchilla, an owl and a ball python, trucked in to create an exotic atmosphere for Zoo New England's annual fundraiser, Zootopia, held high atop the Financial District at the State Room.

The stuffed monkeys (a mix of howler and colobus) corresponded with nifty raffle prizes, while one guest mistook an animal handler from the Franklin Park Zoo for a waiter and afterwards said, "I almost ate that tarantula as an appetizer."

As for the party animals on-hand, they included cochairs Kathryn Conway and Marlo Fogelman, emcee Rhondella Richardson, absurdly handsome restaurateur Matt Burns, Boston's answer to Anderson Cooper, Garret Harker, Brookline bright young things Andy Bernstein and Jackie Shopack, function room magnate Jim Apteker, gallery owner Colin Rhys, real estate titan Marvin Gilmore, power broker Gloria Larson, PR babe Danielle Cirigliano, perfume purveyor David Garten (of Neil Morris Fragrances), art dealer Andrea Claggett and her adoring husband, Gordon, the dashing and debonair Dean Hara, tsarina of all the Newtons Rina Pesselman, and one woman who said, "Have you ever noticed that Rolexes come in three sizes: men's, women's and 'I really need to get laid?'"

Certainly the most original "ask" we've seen recently, the Zoo's CEO John Linehan had a raven accepting donations in its beak, prompting one guest to say, "I've heard of feeding birds peanuts, not fifties," while another guest bit into a zebra-shaped cookie and said, "Mmm. Tastes just like chicken."

THE BLIND LEADING THE BLIND...

It was well worth the drive all the way ou to Stow (thank you, Mapquest!) to the es tate of Caroline and Bob Collings to at tend the Flight for Sight benefit for th Schepens Eye Research Institute.

Known in certain circles for his collec tions of antique and historic cars and ai planes, the affable Bob gave tours before din ner while the unfailingly gracious Carolin charmed everyone and apologized that he gardens weren't at their best despite the fac that everyone was taking pictures of them.

Present and accounted for: force of na ture Rosalie Cohen and her husband, co lector and retired toy manufacturer Bert car magnate Ray Ciccolo and his wife Grace, private banker Tom Loucas wit his lovely ladies, wife Carolyn and the adorable daughters, transplants to th country Athena Dimas and Todd Austin eminent eye doctors Donald Korb and h wife, Joan, and honoree Barry Hyde, wh survived a horrible plane crash that ren dered him blind (and yet he still manage to earn a master's, with distinction, fro the incredibly prestigious Embry-Riddl Aeronautical University).

Regarding the party's remote locale, Ro alie Cohen joked, "You all get a certificat for passing Navigation Skills 101 and 102 while the incredibly rare auction item of ride in a B-24 bomber prompted one avia tion buff to say, "That's honestly the mo fun I've ever had with my clothes on."

"Really?" said a friend. "Imagine if you done it naked." IB

TRANSFORMATIONS

As Bostonians, we all know what it's like to live surrounded by the Big Dig. But civil engineers Paul Pedini and Cristina Perez-Pedini live in it, in a way. The couple's Lexington house, designed by innovative Cambridge architects John Hong and Jinhee Park, was built from Big Dig refuse—incorporating immense concrete slabs and steel beams they recovered from the highway project. What's more, the resulting 600,000-pound structure, which graces our cover, can only be called handsome—a demonstration, as Hong calls it, of the possibilities for construction debris.

Clearly, Boston's residential real estate scene is more than brownstones. Take the influx of luxury hotel condos, for example, that offer amenities to lure devout Brahmin from their Beacon Hill estates. This issue takes you inside some of the city's most interesting living spaces.

FENWAY FAUX-PAS

The July 11 Boston's Best issue is even better than last year's! The "Archaic Fenway Park Feature" blurb (page 92), however, is not correct. The circles of dirt near home plate are not "on-deck circles" (although that is what they are often mistaken for), but are actually most often referred to as "fungo circles." Coaches stand on these patches of dirt, instead of wearing out the grass, and use fungo bats to hit ground balls and fly balls to the infielders and outfielders before games. A handful of major league parks have these permanent circles. I look forward to using your advice while continuing to explore the city!

HYDE AND SEEK

Thanks for your issue on Boston's Best. Has anyone on your panel ever visited West Roxbury, Roslindale or Hyde Park? Roslindale Village especially has lots of great restaurants and bars. West Roxbury has some local favorites too. While these spots may not compete with the likes of Mistral and Grill 23 (some may beg to differ), there should have been a mention in the "Neighborhood Bars and Clubs" section. Heck, our own Mayor Tom Menino is a lifelong resident of Hyde Park! Hopefully, your 2008 Boston's Best issue will be more representative.

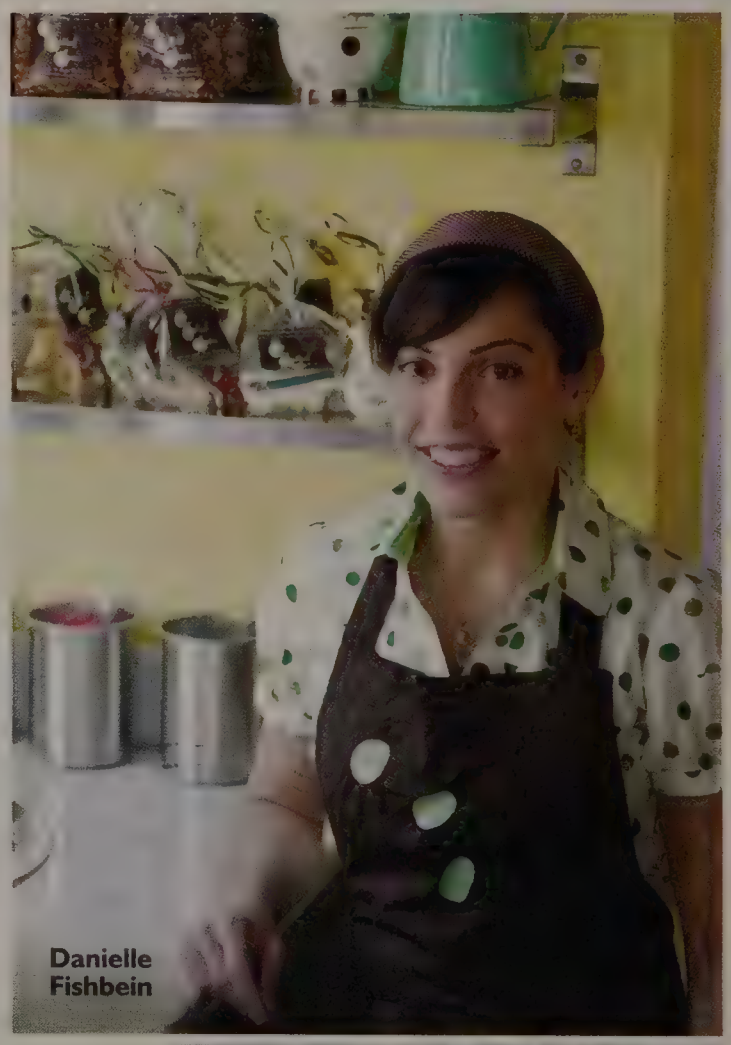
NEW IN TOWN



Hot Spot

"I wanted to live here," says Los Angeles native Danielle Fishbein. "I always felt I fit New England better than the West Coast." Sentiments like this should endear the Spotted Apron's co-owner and pastry chef to her new Beacon Hill neighbors—although her pecan sticky buns with whiskey glaze will probably get the job done.

Straight from a yearlong stint at Radius, 29-year-old Fishbein opened her Cambridge Street café on July fourth. It's the manifestation of a bygone dream. "I always had a vision of owning and living above a bakery—very Old World," she says.

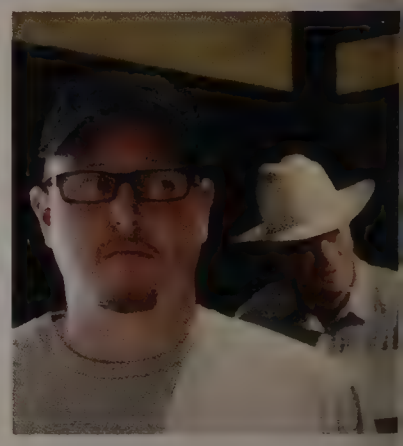
Spotted in both name and décor, the café's interior features dot-print wallpaper and globular light fixtures. In the display case, fondant discs adorn vanilla butter frosting cupcakes, served on dishware hand-painted with circles. Ever faithful to her dream image, Fishbein also incorporated a pristine white marble counter for a traditional bakery look.

Behind the counter lies the open kitchen, where she can win clients over with her charm as well as her mascarpone. "I want to get to know my customers," she says, "and they can see us baking."

Danielle Fishbein

The show never stops as the Spotted Apron staff bakes small batches throughout the day. Now busy Beacon Hill commuters can begin their morning with banana cinnamon hazelnut muffins ($1.95), and 14 hours later, Suffolk students can ease their late-night stress with browned butter brownies ($2.25) and homemade hot chocolate and marshmallows ($3.65)—and the sweets will be equally fresh. For the lunch crowd, there are empanadas, salads and sandwiches, including the Waldorf tuna ($6.85).

The staff mans the ovens all day, starting at 4:30 am. "The oven has a nine-hour timer, so I set it when I get here in the morning," Fishbein says. "When it goes off, I set it again, and I know I have another nine hours to go."



With this puritanical work ethic, it's no wonder she feels at home in Boston, but the source of her drive has more to do with legacy than location. Her great-grandmother owned a bakery in Latvia and served as the inspiration for the Bubbie Stefie, a hot dog wrapped in homemade brioche ($3.50). Her grandmother inspired the recipe for the Mandlebrot, a twice-baked toasted almond cookie ($1.35), and her mother paints the dishware (which is also for sale). With roots like that, it's no wonder where Fishbein's bakery vision came from. The Spotted Apron, 326 Cambridge St., Boston (617-624-9700). www.thespottedapron.com.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: What's it mean to be a punk comic? Aren't all comics kind of punks?

JT Habersaat: [Laughs.] It means that I've tried to bypass the club scene in my career, and focus on more unorthodox venues, like ro clubs and coffee shops. I still do comedy clubs, but just not many as a lot of comics.

IB: So what's your comedy about?

JTH: It's pretty observational, in a Bill Hicks kind of wa and as my career's gone on, I've been delivering mo story-based stuff. In the mold of Henry Rollins.

IB: How weird would it have been in 1985 if someone had told you one day you'd be on tour with Bad Religion?

JTH: Yeah, I'd say it woulda been pretty weird. Say wh you will about the Warped Tour, but they've been nothi but great. And Bad Religion, they're legendary.

JTH: I hung out with them a little in Dallas, and yeah, seems like they're still having a good time.

Cambridge One More… When we heard that Harvard Square pizza staple Cambridge, 1 would debut a new location in Boston, we nearly convulsed trying to predict the name: Cambridge, 2? No, it would have to be Boston, 1. Or maybe Boston, presented by Cambridge, 1? We found out on July 6, when the new Cambridge, 1—same name as the original—opened near Fenway at Trilogy Place. Sometimes consistency is a good thing. Like its predecessor, the restaurant serves specialty salads and creative gourmet pizzas, plus beer and wine. 1381 Boylston St., Boston (617-437-1111).

Taking It Outside… The Institute of Contemporary Art (ICA) has already upped the city's cultural currency. Now the ICA has set its sights on Boston's culinary landscape with a new al fresco dining patio. Located outside the museum's Water Café the patio provides one of the top dining views in the city, overlooking the harbor. The café is the brainchild of celebrity chef Wolfgang Puck and opens at 10 am, Tuesday through Sunday, offering fresh baked breads, pastries and Peet's coffee for breakfast. A lunch and dinner menu features salads, sandwiches, soups, paninis and more. 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617-478-3291). www.icaboston.org.

Sola Shift... Bad news first: Jasmine Sola Warehouse store is closing on Comm. Ave., which means all those adorable marked-down clothes are no longer yours for the buying. The good news is a regular Jasmine Sola boutique will replace it—which means a larger variety of trendy labels, including J Brand, La Rok and Splendid. No more trekking to Newbury for a last-minute-date dress. Meanwhile, over in Harvard Square, the company has consolidated two stores into the smaller store's space. We can deal with the change, as long as they stick around. *Jasmine Sola, 963 Comm. Kick in the Duff... Woburn's Boston America Corp., purveyors of fine novelty products like Extra Strength Boob Boosting Mints, has unveiled Duff Energy Drink, a doppelganger for Duff Beer of The Simpsons fame. Pick up a can at Newbury Comics, Sugar Heaven or Spencer's Gifts. And now a little something for the target audience: Duff Energy Drink has as much taurine and caffeine as Red Bull. That's good. It also has 41grams of sugar. That's bad. Duff comes with a pleasing mandarin orange taste. That's good. Ingredients include potassium benzoate... that's bad. www.bostonamerica.com

Ducks in a Row... When Super Duck Tours arrived in Charlestown this spring, Boston Duck Tours was quick to cry fowl. (Zing! Suing for trademark infringement, 13-year-old Boston Duck Tours felt the similarity in both name and logo was confusing tourists. Super Duck Tours argued that the dueling companies were clearly different, as their names began with different words and their cartoon duck wears a cape while Boston's wears a cap. Following a ruling from U.S. District Court judge Nathaniel Gorton, Super Duck Tours has changed to Super Duck Excursions.

Might we suggest another waterfowl? How about Seagull Excursions, which would pit con DUCKtors against KAWnductors, and surely lead to some epic bird-calling battles at citywide traffic stops.

Here's the Skinny... They say beauty is only skin-deep, so let's pay tribute to the dermis, shall we? TICKET OR STICK IT Didn't buy Red Sox tickets last winter? Good luck, chump.

I've had it with the Red Sox. Not the Red Sox themselves, mind you, but the whole Red Sox Nation mania. Consider that back in 1999 or 2000, my dad and I spontaneously decided to hit a Sox game, so we bought tickets from a scalper. They were bleacher seats for $40—twice face value—but we figured it was a fair price considering Pedro was pitching that night. Imagine that! Only paying double face value to see the ace. Those were innocent times.

Fast forward to 2007. Here are your options for attending a Red Sox game: A) buy tickets the second they go on sale sometime around Christmas and hope you'll be able to attend a given game eight months away; B) buy tickets on Craigslist from someone who bought them the second they went on sale over the winter; or C) head down to Fenway and roll the dice dealing with the lecherous disease-ridden pustules on society's bottom—ticket scalpers.

I had a friend in town from Washington, D.C., when the Sox played the Rangers in June. We decided to try to go to a game, so I found four tickets on Craigslist for the bargain price of 300 percent face value. I made arrangements to meet the seller outside the Kenmore T stop. Plans were locked in.

That is, until he e-mailed me three hours before game time to say he'd given the tickets to his boss. The suddenly shady seller explained his boss asked for the tickets, and he really couldn't say no. I wrote him a terse e-mail explaining that when you put your tickets up for sale and commit to unloading them, thus setting in motion plans for four other individuals, you don't back out at the last minute. You tell your boss, "Sorry, I don't have the tickets," because you have a shred of moral fiber and human decency. Most bosses would respect that, and understand that to do otherwise would mark one as a despicable toadie who can't get ahead on talent but is willing to backstab strangers in the hopes that proffered Red Sox tickets might lead to a cubicle a little closer to the window in a certain Back Bay office tower. Not that this guy works in the Back Bay or has a ridiculously overblown e-mail moniker that alludes to royalty, which he uses to dick people over on Craigslist. I'm just giving you an example.

This leaves me with but one option: scalpers. Among the crowd around Fenway, the scalper is the guy wearing the soiled Drew Bledsoe jersey, scratching his flea bites and looking like his last shower came about 14 meth hits ago. While waiting for my buddy to arrive at Kenmore Square, I see a scalper smoking a cigarette while wearing a nicotine patch. A uniformed cop walks up to him, points to the patch and belligerently swats the butt out of his hand. It's a beautiful little moment, and I'm glad I was there.

A few minutes later, though, I'm on the wrong end of the scalper sales conduit. The first inning is under way, so I feel like I'm in a good position to avoid a total ripoff. But the first scalper I approach tells me, "I've got general admission for $100 each." Huh? "There is no general admission," I reply. "Do you mean standing room?" "Yeah," he concedes, adding, "Dude, it's the Rangers." Oh, right, I forgot. Boston pretty much shuts down when the Rangers come to town, doesn't it? I mean, Sammy Sosa and Kenny Lofton on the same team? I'd definitely pay extra to see those guys, as long as the ticket included a time machine set to 1996. Plus, you know, Wakefield's pitching.

AMONG THE FENWAY CROWD, THE SCALPER IS THE GUY WEARING THE SOILED DREW BLEDSOE JERSEY AND SCRATCHING HIS FLEA BITES.

I move along to another scalper, and the guy is still charging $100, but he has actual seats. However, we'd probably have to raise our voices to talk about the game, what with the seats being four sections apart. We give up and head to the Cask 'n Flagon, where we belly up to the bar and watch the game for free while a comely barmaid serves up cold beers and hot buffalo wings. Screw Craigslist, screw the scalpers and, finally, screw Fenway Park.

The problem isn't opportunistic scalpers or the Red Sox's popularity. The problem is that Fenway Park needs 20,000 more seats—maybe the Yankees will let us take some from their old stadium, which they have the good sense to abandon. When standing room goes for $100 a ticket, something's seriously wrong with the supply/demand relationship. I write this on a Monday, and tonight Kason Gabbard pitches against the mighty Kansas City Royals. Of course, the game is sold out. Dude, it's the Royals. IB

WELCOME TO THE IMPROPER SCHOOL OF SPORTS

JULIE CORDEIRO/BOSTON RED SOX

5 Reasons To Love Local Sports

1 Striking Out The Odds
It's crazy to try and sum up Jon Lester's return in one paragraph, so we'll just leave it at this: Anyone who watched him take the mound on July 23—only 11 months after being diagnosed with leukemia—gained a little inspiration for their own lives. We're happy to have him back.

2 No Vicktimizers
We treat athletes like gods here in Boston, so with big-time stars like Michael Vick, Pacman Jones and Kobe Bryant appearing on TheSmokingGun.com as often as they do ESPN, we should feel lucky that our most high-profile problem is a left fielder who periodically likes to pee inside the Green Monster.

3 Dennis Drinkwater
Or as you might know him: the Guy Who Sits Behind Home Plate For Nearly Every Red Sox Game. Is it weird that we feel like panicky parents, secretly fearing for Double D's safety when he's not at a game? How about a head's up, Dennis? We don't think it's asking too much.

4 The Best A Man Can Get
You've got to love Gillette Stadium. Heading to the Razor every fall—after five months at Fenway—is the equivalent of watching The Golden Girls on a black-and-white TV for an entire summer and then having the Best of Jenna Jameson Blu-ray disc delivered to your doorstep on Labor Day. We guess there's something about post–Depression Era construction that suits us nicely.

5 Cora-zy Good
On a great team, a guy like Alex Cora is almost as important as a Big Papi. He can play four positions, doesn't make errors or mental mistakes, and in limited action, easily has as many big hits this year as JD Drew—but then again, so does Terry Francona.

4 Dates To Watch

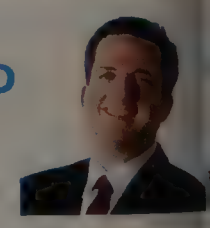
1 Aug. 3: The Sox leave for a nine game/10-day road trip against the Angels, Mariners and Orioles. Although at this point, Camden Yards is basically a homestand for Boston.

2 Aug. 4: Roger Clemens turns 45, and when you consider he debuted the same year as The Cosby Show and Who's the Boss?, you've got to admit how amazing the backstabbing weasel's career has been.

3 Aug. 10: Pats open the pre-season down in Tampa Bay, and we'd like to suggest fitting Tom Brady with a plastic, injury-proof bubble until Sept. 9. These games are the most nerve-wracking part of a Patriot fan's existence.

4 Aug. 12: David Beckham makes his local debut with the L.A. Galaxy, marking the first time we've been excited to watch a Revolution game since, well, ever.

3 Fenway Tips We May Regret Revealing

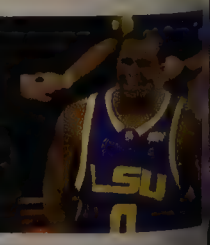


1 Need a post-game cab? Take your first right after the Mass. Pike (Newbury Street) and walk the route behind Hotel Commonwealth. You can usually grab one there before the scavengers converge.

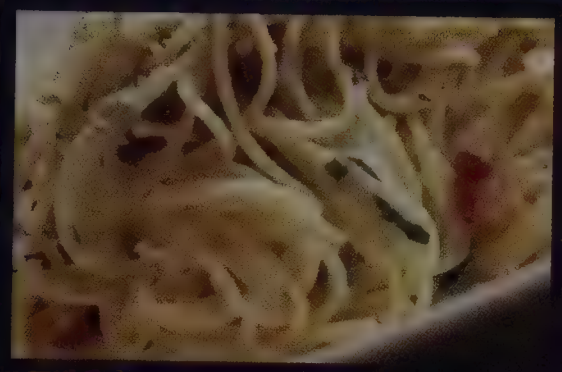
2 The best concession stand is also the least used. From Gate A, head down the ramp and all the way back to the left. At the end, stands a grill with the sweetest sausages in the park, and a lone beer vendor just waiting to get you drunker than Lindsay Lohan on a Tuesday morning.

3 Two outs, nobody on with the visiting team at bat is the indisputable best time for a beer run. We guarantee you'll be back at your seat before the bottom of the inning.

Head 2 Head



JERRY REMY VS. BILL SIMMONS



In late July, Remy and Simmons got into it (well, kind of, after the Sports Guy called Remy a chain-smoker in his application to be the president of Red Sox Nation. But through all the back and forth, a glaring question went ignored: What the hell is the President of Red Sox Nation Contest and are people really taking it seriously? All we know is that with Boston Rob somehow involved (his application is online in the "celebrity section"), we're steering clear; that guy's like a human BS detector.

1 Shining Star From Las Vegas...
Was Glen "Big Baby" Davis. We know there had to be a reason he slipped to the second round, but then again, the same thing happened to Gilbert Arenas, Carlos Boozer, Michael Redd. And while we're hesitant to get excited over summer league action, and still slightly worried about his Rosie O'Donnell physique, we're now officially looking forward to the Big Baby era.

Soroff ON

BRUCE LITTLEFIELD

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

A native of South Carolina, Bruce Littlefield graduated Phi Beta Kappa from the University of South Carolina and pursued a career as an actor in New York before receiving a full scholarship from NYU to study journalism. After earning his master's, he cowrote the play Game Show, a parody of pop culture. He also worked with author Gail Sheehy on the best-selling biography of Hillary Clinton, Hillary's Choice. He then co-authored the best-selling Use What You've Got and Other Life Lessons I Learned From My Mom with real estate mogul Barbara Corcoran, with whom he recently penned If You Don't Have Big Breasts, Put Ribbons on Your Pigtails. He used the proceeds of his books to open the Rosendale Cement Co., a restaurant in the Catskills, followed by the Alamo: Mexican Food Worth Fighting For and the Last Wash Laundromat, but he recently sold those businesses to concentrate on other projects. His weekly column, "Moving In," chronicles his experiences moving to the country with his partner, Scott, and he also writes a gossip column for Inside/Out Magazine. He divides his time between homes in Manhattan and the Catskills.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, your résumé's kinda all over the map. Do you have ADD?
Bruce Littlefield: Yes. I'm always searching, and I'm not sure what I'm searching for.
JS: When someone asks you at a cocktail party, "What do you do?" What's your answer?
BL: I search out what other people do. I'm looking for the best thing someone else is doing and glom onto it for a little while.
JS: So how would you describe yourself?
BL: I'm a student. I truly think if I had endless resources I'd just go to school forever and learn. So each big project that I've done, I learned from somebody else.
JS: Single most important thing when buying a house?
BL: It's like trying on a pair of jeans. You know as soon as you try them on if you feel sexy or not. If you walk in the door of a property and you don't get a feeling of "Aaah. I belong here," then you're not supposed to buy it. So it's that tingle, I guess.
JS: Biggest mistake people make buying real estate?
BL: Poor negotiating. Putting only one thing on the table. If it's only the price, you're going to lose on that negotiation, so you should also bring into play the closing date, the financing, the chandelier you might want, etc. You'll give up this and gain on that. In any transaction, both sides want to feel like they got a deal. With a good deal, both sides are a little bit happy and a little bit sad. It should be, "I love this house and I'm sad that I'm selling it, but I'm happy that you're getting it." It's that give and take.
JS: With respect to moving, which I think is the most hideous thing in the world…
BL: Burying your mother is the second worst. [Laughs.] Yeah, it's awful.
JS: Most important thing to do when moving?
BL: Clear out all the dead wood. Moving is the single best opportunity to pare down your life and edit your possessions.
JS: So are you the gay Martha Stewart?

"MOVING IS THE SINGLE BEST OPPORTUNITY TO PARE DOWN YOUR LIFE AND EDIT YOUR POSSESSIONS."

BL: [Laughs.] I love her. She's one of the best students. She really learns her stuff and tries to pass it along. I was looking at jadeite today, and it's outrageously expensive. Why? Because Martha said it was nice. But I guarantee that a friend brought her a platter of cookies on a jadeite plate, and she said, "What is this?" I hope to be the gay Martha if that means I'm learning and experiencing things from people who know all about it.
JS: Do you think of yourself as a lifestyle guru?
BL: That's so funny. They use that in my bio, but I think that what I am is someone enjoying his life, and if I can help other people do that, great.
JS: You bought and restored three historic properties. Boston's a very historic city. What's the best and worst part of dealing with that?
BL: The worst part is building inspectors. You need to know the ordinances, and if it's a historic preservation property, you're screwed. I still say do it. I did, and I'm happy I did, but Lordy, there was a lot of work and I made a lot of mistakes.
JS: You opened a restaurant knowing nothing about the business except what you learned waiting tables. Isn't that a case of optimism trumping common sense?
BL: That's my secret, optimism. I've always been able to spin it into something great.
JS: Why'd you get rid of your restaurants?
BL: Because someone offered me a lot of money. [Laughs.] It was such a great time and a lot of hard work, and I loved it, but I'd never do it again. A publisher asked me to write a book on how to open a successful restaurant and I said I'd only do it if the last line was "Don't do it."
JS: You're obsessed with Airstream trailers. Nicest trailer park you've ever seen?
BL: The one I grew up in in South Carolina. I don't think I've ever said that out loud. [Laughs.] But I have such fond and vivid memories. One was my neighbor who weighed 400 pounds wedging herself between her car and my dad's to prevent them from hitting. You can imagine what a scene that was.
JS: Think there's something to be said for paring down your life so you can fit everything in something that size?
BL: I think it should always be an option. I think you shouldn't be too attached to stuff.
JS: So given a choice, would you pick a 15,000-square-foot mansion or a double-wide?
BL: [Laughs.] The 15,000-square-foot mansion. Why? Because I could have a lot of friends over. But I do love the Airstream, and I think if people are retiring, it's the most brilliant move. Sell your house. Pare down to your favorite things, and travel the country, have your nest egg and winter down south, summer up north. Best of all, if you don't like your neighbors, you can move the next day. It's the perfect retirement plan.
JS: Tell me a secret about Hillary Clinton.
BL: Well, I don't know that it's a secret, but I think it's interesting that as a law student at Yale, she advised the Watergate hearings, and knowing that, that her husband would be impeached [seems] bizarre. It's sort of Shakespearean.
JS: "Moving In" is sort of a gay Green Acres. So who's Eva Gabor?
BL: My friends would say me, but I would say Scott. He'd probably say me, too, but it's probably a combination. Scott's not Mr. Fix-It, and Eddie Albert, as I remember it, was not Mr. Fix-It.
JS: The names of your restaurants and books are hilarious. How high are you when you think them up?
BL: I'd like to thank my friend Mary Jane. I'm a firm believer in green rights.
JS: Three things in your house that you would save in a fire?
BL: Assuming Scott could save himself, my dog, my computer and a piece of my grandmother's china. But the great thing about my house, and it's one of the things I sort of preach, is that I'm not attached to things partially because I've attained them in relatively inexpensive fashion. They're made to be used, but when someone breaks a glass in my house, I don't freak out.
JS: OK, biggest décor tip?
BL: Lighting is everything. You can make any room look good with lighting.
JS: Advice for couples who are moving who don't want it to end in divorce?
BL: Figure out space that will be just yours and space that will be just the other person's. Because so often, one person will be the dominant force in decorating, and the partner B (poor Scott) doesn't have space to call his own. In our house, Scott has a meditation room. That's his thing.
JS: Does he resent you using him as materia
BL: There have been occasions, but he's such a good sport, and he knows that I'm poking fun as much at myself.
JS: So I take it you're a Price Is Right fan?
BL: Oh my God! I can't believe you asked me that. I honestly believe I owe my writing career to that show. I've loved it since I was a kid, and I went out to California to see it once, which was a highlight of my life, and when I got back to New York, I wrote Game Show, which launched my career.
JS: So who do you think should replace Bob Barker?
BL: Me! IB

Better, Not Bigger

JUST OUTSIDE OF BOSTON, on a quiet hilltop in Lexington, sits a house made from refuse. Six hundred thousand pounds of refuse, to be exact. Massive steel beams and concrete slabs that once hovered above downtown Boston as the elevated I-93 expressway now form the backbone of an unusual private residence: the Big Dig house. The home is a demonstration of recycling on a grand scale, the joining of infrastructure and architecture to create an elegant model of sustainability. And the architects who designed this unusual structure are standing next to me in the front yard.

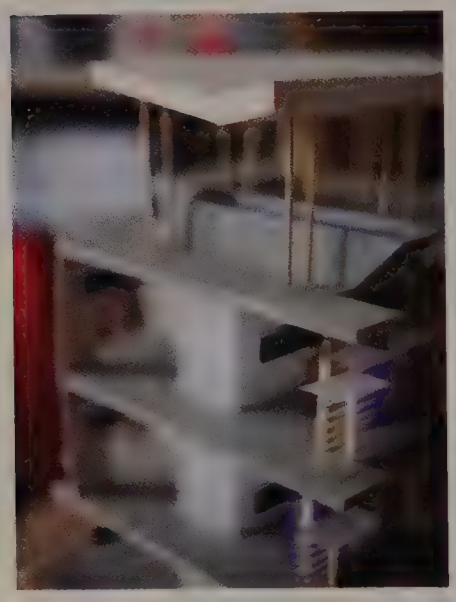
John Hong and Jinhee Park are the force behind Single Speed Design, a fledgling architecture firm in Cambridge that's bringing an innovative style to Boston-area neighborhoods. The partners work under a basic philosophy of "sustainability and minimalism," designing energy-efficient structures with the least amount of materials to create a sense of interior space and a strong connection to the natural world. "Our clients are asking us not to build bigger houses," Hong says. "They're asking us to build better houses."

Fluttering red maples and linden trees shade a short stretch of brick sidewalk in front of their office in the Cambridgeport area, a dense urban enclave of faded industry and up-and-coming residential development. When I arrive, Park, neatly dressed in a striped skirt, leads me toward the back of the two-story building, down a cluttered hallway and past a small recording studio that shares space here. Hong meets us in the back, clad in flip-flops and a loose-collared shirt.

I expect to chat in the dark confines of this space, but they instead lead me out the back door. We immediately emerge in front of the Valentine Houses, a tall three-unit townhouse whose wood siding glows softly in the midafternoon sun. Completed in 2003, the rectangular structure represents their firm's first finished project. It is also their home—they live in the smallest unit, a convenient 1,100 square feet. "We have a one-minute commute," Park smiles.

Natural Roots

Park, 35, grew up in Korea, graduating from Seoul National University in 1995 with a degree in industrial design. After working for several years in Japan, she moved to Boston, earning a degree in architecture from the Harvard Graduate School of Design (GSD) in 2002. There she met Hong, 38, a native of the D.C.-area suburbs in Virginia, who likewise has a master's of architecture from Harvard. Together they founded Single Speed Design in late 2001.



Park's background has had a substantial influence on her work. "Where I grew up, the use of natural air, the openness and flexibility of space, and direct contact with nature are all very important. I find that Eastern culture has more of an obsession, almost, with nature." Hong agrees. "Over there, it's a matter of practice. It's not something special, it's just something that you do."

In Boston, on the other hand, they point out how the extremes of New England weather have had a marked impact on architectural design—and on our connection with the outdoors. "Because winter is harsh, there is not as much interaction between the inside and outside," Park explains. "Your first response to the harsh weather is to completely enclose yourself." Hong nods in agreement. "It's almost like a negation of nature. Kind of like you're hiding from it."

They call the Valentine Houses a critique of the "inward looking 'winterized box'" that defines much of New England architecture. Unlike the dark interiors of traditional colonial designs, which often feature only a handful of individual windows, the inside of their apartment is awash in natural light. "The house is all about the daylight strategy," Hong says as we climb the stairs into the apartment.

Light pours in through a bank of windows on 18-foot-high walls in the front living room. There is an upstairs, but it does not extend the length of the apartment, leaving this portion open and two stories high. Tall grass waves in a planter box just outside the main window, a natural interruption of an otherwise unobstructed view of a nearby building. Other elements highlight the vertical space: The stovepipe from a small wood stove shoots straight to the ceiling; a pair of giant reeds leans against the wall. We sit near the back at a tall kitchen table. The ambient light is such that several minutes pass before I realize that no overhead lights have been switched on.

The windows, a collage of various rectangles, include one slender pane that extends all the way to the floor, an element that enhances the connection with the outdoors by removing the barrier from the waist down. "For a brief moment it feels like you're outside," Park says. And indeed it does, as if I could step through the glass and into the leafy backyards of the surrounding neighborhood.

Opposite from the main block of windows, high up near the ceiling, are two tiny panes on either side of a corner. A shaft of sunlight beams through one, moving across the wall and later through the other window as the sun progresses across the sky—another link to the natural world. "You can see time change," Hong says.

Upstairs in the window-rich main bedroom, the ceiling has been painted a purplish-blue to blend in with the Boston sky. The room is the tallest single-height room in the house and its ceiling extends a few feet above the roof. Several long thin windows line the upper wall. When open in summer, they create a natural air flow that cools the apartment as warm air rises to the ceiling and rushes out. On this balmy afternoon, I can actually feel the air moving through the bedroom door. The apartment is equipped with air conditioning, but "we only have to turn it on about a week each summer," Hong says.

EFFICIENCY AND sustainability are cornerstones of their design philosophy, and they plan their structures with an eye toward minimum impact and resource use. The height of their living room, for example, was determined by the standard size of construction materials. By matching the dimensions, they were able to use less lumber and other supplies: no reshaping required, no cut-off ends wasted in the process. Other examples abound. The use of natural light reduces electricity needs.

The stovepipe that extends to the ceiling is a nice design element, but it also heats the house from top to bottom.

To date, Single Speed Design has completed more than a dozen projects in the Boston area, from a zinc-clad apartment building in Porter Square in Cambridge to an interior redesign of the Black Lotus Yoga studio near their office. Hong and Park are currently working on a lobby renovation at the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston, where they're using recycled seatbelts to create an arrangement of curved walls and seating. "It's such a strong material, but it gets thrown out otherwise," Hong says. Along with this state-funded project (their first), Park and Hong are occupied with a private residence in Medfield and a few smaller interior projects in Boston.

"There are a lot of people who consider themselves to be thoughtful designers who are doing sustainable work," notes Maryann Thompson, an adjunct professor at the GSD whose eponymous firm also focuses on sustainable design. "But I think [Single Speed's] commitment to creating architecture out of unexpected, recycled materials is very inspiring. The fact that they do it] successfully and the end product is so beautiful—it's inspiring for the whole design community to see that done. I think they're real artists."

Their heaviest commitment to sustainability is on display at the Big Dig House. We drive to Lexington from Cambridge, passing block after block of winterized boxes as we make our way down Route 2. We eventually emerge in the quiet suburbs atop the Moon Hill neighborhood, where traffic noise and dense development are replaced by lustrous greenery and the sounds of neighborhood kids playing driveway basketball. The Big Dig House towns the site in front of us.

The project was commissioned by Paul Pedini and his wife, Cristina Perez-Pedini, civil engineers who spent much of the last decade working on Boston's $15 billion highway project. The goal was to create a house using recycled material from the demolished expressway that once ran through downtown. Park spent days combing through debris at sites in Everett, Lancaster and Worcester, eventually locating the 13 concrete slabs that would form the floors and roof of the building. "That was half the job," Park says, looking momentarily fatigued as she recalls the process.

She also helped select the thick steel beams required to hold up the 23,000-pound slabs. These ponderous trusses once supported millions of vehicles. Now they provide a heavy-duty framework unusual in home design. This strength means that no internal structural supports are required, allowing for a flexible and open floor plan inside the 3,800-square-foot residence.

Think in Terms of Reuse

It took only two days—and a powerful crane—to frame the house. ("It typically takes 60 days for most home construction," Hong compares.) As with the Valentine Houses, the construction materials were used as is and the structure was designed to accommodate the exact dimensions of the slabs and beams. Sheathed in wood paneling and lightweight metal railings, the finished project tips the scales at more than 600,000 pounds, roughly three times the weight of a typical home.

Most houses are designed to support 40 pounds per square foot in living areas. The materials in the Big Dig house, on the other hand, can hold five times that—200 pounds per square inch. Hong points to the cinder-block two-car garage, which connects to the house on one side and is topped by a concrete slab. Portions of an extensive patio garden are just visible from the driveway. "There's three feet of soil on top of that roof," he says, more weight than any timber-framed structure could support. Other potential uses of the materials, Park says, include a second-floor garage or a rooftop swimming pool.

Down the street, two houses away, an enormous cream-colored home is nearing completion. Built in oversized McMansion style, Hong estimates its area is between 6,000 and 7,000 square feet. He is also quick to offer his opinion on this brand of home-building. "Oh, my God. The amount of heat it takes to heat and cool those.... It's kind of embarrassing. What a waste of all those materials and resources."

Turning back to the Big Dig House, he muses on the possibilities it represents. "This house is more or less a demonstration, but it's not the reality. What if this sort of construction happened all the time in cities everywhere? The state owns [the debris], why not use it for a state project—a library or school? This is beyond architecture. It's the bigger concept, it's the way of thinking."

But Park realizes that time is running out for more Big Dig projects. A planned 24-unit Big Dig building for a site on Massachusetts Avenue was cancelled when the landowner passed away. Storing such massive infrastructure waste costs the state money, and it won't be held indefinitely. Ultimately, the Big Dig House may be nothing more than a demonstration of possibility. But for Hong and Park, it will always be a piece of their growing portfolio. "In architecture, there's no right or wrong answer," Hong reflects. "It's an exploration of ideas." IB

The BATHROOM Goes Glam

Options like deep soaking tubs, light-therapy showers, flat screens and fireplaces give this room a whole new allure

Story by MARNI ELYSE KATZ · Photographs by MICHAEL PIAZZA

ONCE UPON A TIME, HOMEOWNERS dreamed of stainless steel stoves, glossy granite counters, sleek cabinetry and industrial freezers. With such visions now a well-designed reality, they've turned their attention to quieter corners. Nudged along by society's newfound obsession with health and wellness, the room of the moment is the home spa, or as more modest folks call it, the bathroom. It has become a full-fledged living area as overstressed professionals seek private spaces for rest and relaxation.

"Bathrooms can take up 30 percent of the floor plan now, rather than the traditional 10 percent," says Stephen Chung, design director at Urbanica. And it's about specialization as much as size. Chung, the design architect behind the D4 Condos in the South End, created a minimalist, spa-like interior for the master bathroom in his own Wayland digs. Or rather, his wife's bathroom. "She really prefers I not use it," he admits. "I don't know what she does up there; it's her retreat." Who can blame her, with an oval tub that boasts a natural view; blue glass tiles overhead; and a floor of statuario marble.

She's not alone in her soaking splendor. Other extravagant amenities home spa-ers request include towel warming drawers; cold-storage medicine chests ideal for preserving vitamins and organic makeup; tanning panels recessed into shower walls; and tea stations with water purifiers, instant hot water taps, minifridges and chaises.

Hard to picture? Let's take a peek into some posh home spas.

Into the Deep

The Great Outdoors

THESE DAYS, THE LINE BETWEEN INDOOR and outdoor spaces can get blurred. Sliding wall panels transform bedrooms into open-air sanctuaries, outdoor living rooms come complete with fireplaces, and patios serve as fully functional second kitchens. Bathrooms are no exception. Take restaurateur Joey Arcari's penthouse roof deck in Fort Point Channel. Designed by Elizabeth Whittaker of Elizabeth Whittaker/Architecture, Inc., this eight-sided deck with seven-foot screens of woven ipé wood and waist-high walls of transparent glass is the ultimate home spa, featuring a shower, Japanese soaking tub (or ofuro with jets), sauna for two with a window for gazing at the city, dining nook, gigantic grill and plasma TV encased in a weatherproof box.

Clockwise from far right: A Back Bay bathroom evokes an Old World feel with its fireplace; A roof deck in Fort Point Channel pulls out all the home-spa stops: shower, soaking tub, heat accoutrements, dining nook, sauna tools and weatherproof TV.

Media Blitz

HIGH TECH HAS INVADED the bathroom. "Homeowners can run their homes from touch panels on their bathroom walls," says Frederic Paradis, co-owner of Elite Media Solutions in Wellesley Hills. They can monitor security cameras, adjust light settings—anything really. And, of course, the bathrooms themselves are tricked out with gadgets. In addition to the usual telephone extensions, Paradis installs Internet jacks for security conscious clients who can't conduct business on wireless networks. And he's integrated plenty of 32-inch flat-panel TVs in master baths. Often they are recessed into walls and mounted on arms that can be pulled out and angled for easy viewing from the tub or toilet. Streaming video is popular, too. The push of a button fires up an iPod that's docked in another room so tunes float freely, then sends CNN streaming on the flat screen. Some TVs are even programmed to execute an image flip, so stockbrokers can accurately read quote tickers while shaving. What's next: videoconferencing-enabled bidets?

Light My Fire

ERIC ANDERSON, OWNER of Anderson Fireplace in Abington, chuckles when he describes what many people imagine as the ultimate setup: a see-through fireplace between the master bedroom and the bathroom, with a flat-screen TV over the mantel. He imagines the husband enjoying a football game and reveling in the spectacle of two half-time shows. Anderson sees the glorification of the master suite as one of the biggest changes in American architecture today. Stephen Payne, co-owner of Payne/Bouchier, has installed many fireplaces in Boston bathrooms, including one with an Old World feel in the Back Bay, where the fireplace sits at the foot of the built-in soaking tub.

Purple Rain

INSPIRED BY THE FACILITIES in luxury hotels, homeowners are installing high-tech showers. Some come with oversized showerheads and body sprays—like a human car-wash—as well as steam capabilities. Deborah Dumel, a sales design consultant at Splash in Newton, points to Bain Ultra Temazkal Shower, which incorporates dry heat and cool mist, aromatherapy and luminotherapy—intense light that helps treat sleepiness and seasonal mood disorders. The units can be customized with tiles and wood components. Then there's Kohler's new WaterTile Ambient Rain panel, a 21-inch lighted square for the ceiling displaying chromatherapy sequences of invigorating colors and nature-inspired patterns. iB

SO THIS IS Suburbia

You can take Ezra out of the city, but can you take the city out of Ezra

Story by EZRA DYER · Photographs by EZRA DYER

I AM A COMMITTED CITY-DWELLER. The way I see it, there's city and there's country, a anything in between is purgatory. That said, I've noticed a curious trend lately: Wh my friends once moved within the confines of Boston proper, these days the change address e-mail blast is more likely to include an exotic new zip code. Weymouth. Ne ham. Newburyport, Newburyport, Newburyport.

Within the past year, three of my friends moved to Newburyport. What's up with that? W mysterious, powerful force draws city folk to the threshold of the Live Free or Die state? the proximity of the New Hampshire State Liquor Store? A compulsion to play Powerb Perhaps it's because Newburyport is a historic town, the birthplace of Ezra Dyer.

That's right, about 30 years ago my parents made the Newburyport migration themselves, and I once li there. I don't remember how much I liked it, being between the ages of zero and one at the time. So I de ed to move back—for 24 hours, anyway—by spending a normal weekday shadowing my friend Doyle a keeping a diary of what it's like to live la vida Newburyport. By dipping a toe in the waters of suburban perhaps I could unlock the mystery of this port they call Newbury.

Tuesday, July 17, 2007 6:45 am: Wake-Up Call

DOYLE KNOCKS ON MY DOOR with the morning reveille. The fact that Doyle has a spare bedroom just kickin' around, waiting for visitors, is fantastical. When I have houseguests, they get a sleep sofa and a 90 percent chance of waking up next to a 75-pound dog. That's what happens when your abode has fewer doors than a Chevy Malibu.

In real estate, however, as with life, there are compromises, and the major compromise that goes with Newburyport is the commute. I've consistently reduced my commute from 50 minutes, to a 20-minute walk, to a three-minute walk, to zero. I hate commuting. Doyle's made his peace with the 37 miles that separate his home and office. He knew what he was getting into when he moved to the 'Port. He and his wife started with a given budget, and ealized the farther they ot from Boston, the more ouse they could get. And so hey have a big yard, a deck nd two spare bedrooms. But gain, it's all 37 miles away.

Hence, we rise at 6:45 am to hoot for a 7:15 departure. By y standards, that's both an arly wake-up and ambitious-y quick out-the-door time.

Doyle says he doesn't get as uch sleep as he used to, but e mitigates the commute by orking from home once a week.
lso, he doesn't drink cofee, which is truly disap-ointing right about now. How ar away is Dunkin' Donuts?
on't worry," Doyle tells me.
e pass eight Dunkin' Donuts n the way to work. We'll get ou some Dunkin' Donuts."

:00 am: Perplexing oyle's Neighbors

AYBE I WATCH too much Sopraos, but it seems to me that f you live in the suburbs, ou've got to get your paper at he end of the driveway while earing a bathrobe and slip-ers. Unlike Tony S' world, here are no federal agents aiting next to Doyle's Wall treet Journal, but my shufling presence at the end
f the driveway draws curius glances from the people cross the street, who are reparing to make their own aily pilgrimage to the city.

'This is my friend... he's writer!" Doyle tries to xplain. Uh-huh. Great. The ew guy across the street as freaky writer friends ho get off on picking up the aper in a bathrobe. There oes the neighborhood.

While I enjoyed grab-ing my morning paper, I ould've rather had a dog etch it. Doyle doesn't ave a dog, though. He has cat named Harry, and Hary's not the best at fetch-ng the Wall Street Journal.

:25 am: We're Off

S WE PULL OUT of the drive-ay, I set the radio to Sirius, nd Doyle immediately cor-ects me. "That's not what we are about up here," he says, hanging the station to WBZ's Traffic on the 3s" report. "I an do a pretty good imperonation of the helicoper traffic guy," Doyle says, liding into an exaggerat-dly enunciated, "Things are low from the Lynn Fells!"

We're running a little bit late, but that's OK because summer traffic isn't so bad.

Everyone's on vacation, so things are smooth until you get to Route 1. Doyle has this trip down to a science, and he reveals his secrets as we go. As you pass Kelly's Roast Beef, for example, you want to move into the right lane. "You wouldn't think so, but it's faster," Doyle says.

I've procured a Volvo C70 hardtop convertible for this trip, as it seems like the quintessential suburban car: hardtop for the commute; droptop for evening and weekends in bucolic suburbia; Volvo safety for the little ones. This car gets decent mileage, but even then, this drive would rack up some serious gas bills. Figure about 75 miles round-trip, five days a week, 50 weeks a year. That's 18,750 miles.

If gas costs three bucks and you go 20 miles, you're looking at about $2,800 a year. Add the $3 dollar Tobin toll, and you're up to $3,550.

But Doyle, an expert on the nuances of Route 1, reveals a trick for reducing your fuel bill: Always go to Hess.

"Look at the Hess stations," he says. "It's $2.83, 16 cents a gallon cheaper than all the other ones."

I'd never noticed any difference between gas stations, but I see that Doyle is right. Hess is much cheaper than the surrounding Mobils and Sunocos. How they do this, I haven't a clue. Chalk it up to another mystery of suburbia.

8:40 am: Work

I DROP DOYLE off at work and head for my own office, aka home. I arrive 20 minutes later and make a beeline for the café next door for a giant iced coffee.

While we did pass at least eight Dunkin' Donuts, we never stopped. Traffic was moving, and once you're moving you don't want to stop. Time now for a day at the office.

6:15 pm: Heading Home

I PICK UP DOYLE outside his office and we head north in thick traffic. They're painting the Tobin Bridge, which seems to royally screw things up. I ask Doyle if any one lane is better than another. "On the way home, it's the left lane. Right lane in the morning, left lane at night."

7:00 pm: Dunkin's at Long Last

"YOU'VE GOTTA stop for an iced coffee at Dunkin' Donuts or McDonald's," Doyle says. "You need something to hold you over till you get home."

I pull into the first Dunkin's after Kappy's Liquors, and Doyle simply stares at me like I'm the biggest idiot to set foot in Malden. (We are in Malden, right?)

"What are you doing?" he says. "You don't stop at this one. You stop at one with a drive-through. You don't have time to stop and go in, or you'll be late for dinner."

Obviously, it's amateur hour on Route 1 North.

7:35 pm: Groceries

WE'RE NOT HOME YET. We need to pick up dinner, so we stop at Shaw's. The sheer bounty of food here boggles my urban Stop-and-Shop mind. I feel like a 1980s Russian dropped into a buffet line at the MGM Grand. Doyle picks up a piece of salmon for his wife. It's freshly cut by a fishmonger, not prepackaged three days ago. And we grab ready-to-grill steak tip skewers with vegetables. Such freshness! Such convenience! I bet you can even get Cholula hot sauce here. I should stock up.

7:49 pm: Home Again, Home Again

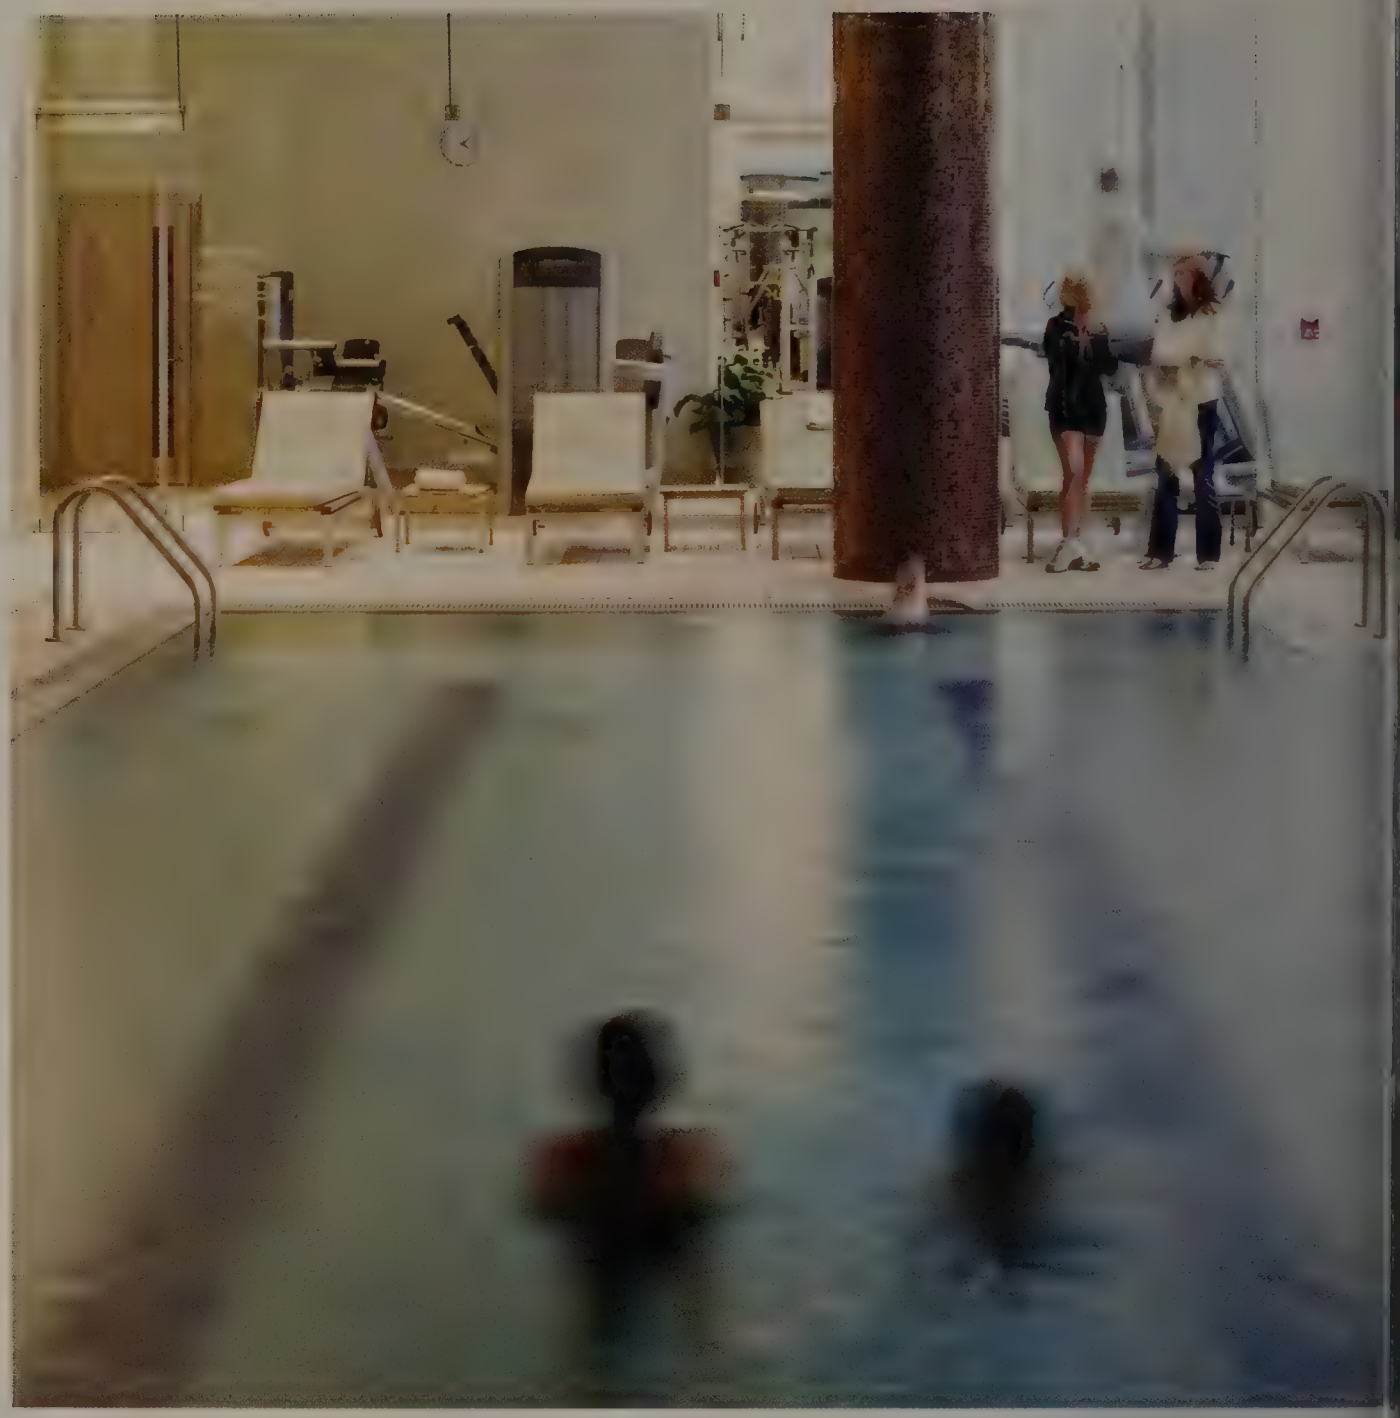
WE'RE BACK. What to do with our suburban evening? Perhaps we'll go kayaking on the Merrimac River. Maybe head into town and stroll among Newburyport's fine restaurants and shops. Of course, we could always go pay homage to the Ezra Dyer House (which I've actually never seen). OR... I could watch Doyle do some weed-wacking.

8:06 pm: Yard Work

"I'M NOT DOING this just to be Suburb Man," Doyle says. "I was planning on doing this anyway." I drink a beer while watching Doyle assault the unruly grass near his fence. I note that his trimmer is electric. I'd definitely have a gas one, I think. You know, make sure the neighbors can hear it, so they know you're on top of things. But yard work as entertainment only takes you so far, and I head inside to check out the Sox game.

8:12 pm: Grillin' and Chillin'

My manly covetous streak is triggered when I notice that Doyle's grill is almost exactly like mine, except he has three burners and mine only has two. I don't have room for a three-burner grill, just like I don't have extra bedrooms, a yard, a garden or a porch. It's the yin-and-yang of city versus suburbs. Doyle has more house to enjoy, but less time to enjoy it. "The weekends are awesome, though," he says. "I feel like I'm on vacation somewhere."



10:15 pm: Bedtime

TIME TO HIT THE SACK. I'd better get my beauty rest, because it just wouldn't do to look all haggard and slovenly when I go to fetch the paper. Plus, I want to try to leave on time tomorrow. Doyle's got his routine pretty well refined, but I think if we pick just the right lanes all the way in, we could make time for a coffee stop. IB

The (NEW) Good Life

With a concierge at your disposal, spa services at your fingertips and a parking space for your yacht, hotel condos turn everyday living into a luxury experience

Story by ETHAN GILSDORF
Photographs by MICHAEL PIAZZA

AT BATTERY WHARF'S SALES and information center at 344 Commercial St., sales manager David Theran is conjuring a fantasy.

He stands in the showroom kitchen, surrounded by a Thermador gas cooktop, oven, warming drawer, refrigerator and dishwasher; a Gaggenau built-in steamer; and a U-Line wine fridge. He uses phrases like "blue eyes granite," "four pipe heating and cooling system" and "smart card technology." He talks about floor-to-ceiling windows, 24/7 concierge and room service, and housekeepers to scrub that Bordeaux stain off the carpet.

"They'll put a mint on your pillow if you want," he says with a smile. Perched on the North End's waterfront, Battery Wharf's four buildings (two of them vaguely cruise ship–shaped) will house 104 condominiums, the 150-room luxury Regent Boston at Battery Wharf, an 18,000 square-foot fitness center and spa by Guerlain, and three restaurants (including one headed by three-star Michelin chef Guy Martin). Surrounding the buildings will be landscaped walkways and plantings, a Coast Guard museum, water taxi stop and a 300-linear-foot marina, should residents need to dock their yachts.

He moves to the conference room. On a flat-screen TV, he shows off the project's Web site—slick graphics, daily images from the construction site and photos of the Italian mountain where marble is being quarried. A QuickTime video seamlessly melds a real drive down Commercial Street with a computer-generated, in-the-driver's-seat rendering of a prospective residen entrance into the premises (a mere block from Hanover Str and its humble Italian cafés). All that's missing from the so and-dance is a little pixelated valet to escort the virtual Lexus the safety of the 376-space underground parking lair.

Theran is a magician, waving his verbal incantations in the seducing you to live this dream of splendor and convenience, imagine this waterfront mirage rising from a tangle of girders a hand-laid brick. Battery Wharf is being sold to Boston as "uto engineered" and an "urban resort." To buy in, simply sign on t dotted line. Asking price for the approximately 900- to 2,5 square-foot units: $675,000 to $8.4 million.

Come December, when the first owners move in, Batte Wharf will be reverie turned reality. And Boston can say the livi large trend of luxury condo housing fused with posh hotel servi has officially arrived—but in fact, it's been coming for decades.

Puttin' Up the Ritz

It all began gently in the 1980s, with the launch of cond linked to the Ritz (now the Taj), Four Seasons and Boston H bor Hotel's Residences at Rowes Wharf. In 2001, the "n Ritz-Carlton on Boston Common upped the ante with its 3 unit condominiums. In autumn 2006, 130 Residences at t gleaming-new InterContinental Hotel opened their doors. B tery Wharf will be joined in the near future by two other hyb hotel-residential projects looming on our skyline: the Man rin Oriental (in the Back Bay near the Pru) and the W (in t Theater District).

Doomsayers decry this rich taste for hotel-condos as the Manattanization of Boston. But so far, people are buying it.

"It's time for a change," says Nancy Greenblatt who, with her husband, Daniel, purchased a three-bedroom unit at Battery Wharf. he couple has lived in Brookline for over 40 years, but with their ildren grown, the Greenblatts say they craved a new social life. "e live in a lovely area, but the people all work. We want to get to e point where we can talk to people. A little excitement."

Like other hotel-condo buyers, the Greenblatts are ready to cialize. "It's time to spread our wings a bit," she says.

"Empty nesters downsizing" are driving the luxury hotel–condo arket, says Kevin Ahearn, president of the high-end residential okerage company Otis & Ahearn. "They are the biggest group nd they are looking for full service, including hotel service living."

Some already live in Boston and want to upgrade; others are oving into the city from the 'burbs like Wellesley. Also buying are middle-aged singles rediscovering the urban life; bicoastal lks needing a Boston residence; second (and third) home owns; foreign nationals; and young professionals, including singles, INK couples and even a few families.

They all say the primary lure is having amenities like fine dining, a ness center and other creature comforts in-house and available at a oment's notice. Even if they don't often order up a midnight snack, e the one-hour pressing or get their shoes shined, just knowing ese services exist makes hotel extravagances worthwhile.

"[Residents] are a very sophisticated, well-traveled group, with gh expectations," says Elaine Flegert, condominium manager at the Four Seasons. "They are looking for access to anything from having firewood for their fireplaces to having a staff member run out for postage stamps to an in-house catered event in their unit." Some services, like the concierge making restaurant and theater ticket reservations, are typically covered by monthly condo fees; other amenities, like room service, cost extra.

Back in the old days, Boston's upper crust would live in a swanky 'hood and maintain a staff of maids and cooks. Now, folks can't be bothered with the upkeep and personnel hassles.

"Many people who live in these places used to live in a townhouse on Beacon Hill," says Tony Pangaro, a developer with Millennium Partners, which built the Ritz-Carlton Towers. He worked with the Four Seasons to construct Boston's first fully-integrated hotel condominium. "But now they don't want to deal with the building itself. People used to have a butler. Now there's the concierge." Condos attached to hotels are ideal for those away on business who can't maintain a residence—clearing snow off the walk or bringing in mail. Or those who just want to purge possessions and streamline living.

It's a Luxe, Luxe Life

"We were looking for something to simplify our lives and provide the services for the future," says Roger Saunders, owner of the Lenox and resident at the Four Seasons since 1985. "Instead of having a 14-room home to care for, now we have a five-room condominium facing the Public Garden." Saunders says the "best thing is the location," but the restaurants, the Bristol and Aujourd'hui, being "an elevator ride away" ain't too shabby, either. Saunders also appreciates the tight security. Most hotel residences, like the Four

Left to right: The InterContinental Residences' pool and concierge are some of the many condo perks for Magdi and Dianne Bichay who live on the 16th floor; Rumba at the Intercontental is another; Roger Saunders has been living at the Four Seasons since 1985.

Seasons, have a separate entrance from the hotel, so that ordinary four-star riff-raff can't wander up to the condos.

On the condos' board of managers, Saunders says that, in the past, units in his building with garden views have sold for about $1,500 a square foot; those with city views go for about $500 less.

That's in-line with the market, says Ahearn, adding that price depends on location, views and levels of service. "A full-service [condo] with hotel, typically they run $500,00 to $600,000 for a one bedroom right up to over $6 million for the biggest units at the top of the building. In between those two prices you have a lot of different price points."

Over at 500 Atlantic Ave., about 30 units remain to be sold at the InterContinental, which offers one- to four-bedroom condos on the hotel's upper floors. The vibe is contemporary, with walnut-stained flooring and pale carpeting, French St. Croix limestone baths, and off-kilter room shapes with interesting angles. Sizes run from 425 to 4,700 square feet, with prices topping out at around $6,850,000 for the monstrous 21st floor penthouse with roof deck and panoramic view of Bunker Hill, Logan and the Harbor Islands.

"We both agree it's a 180 from our [previous] lives," says Dianne Bichay, 52, who moved into a 16th-floor, 1,630-square-foot, city-view unit with her husband Magdi, 56, in November. Previously, they'd lived in three different homes in North Andover over the years, including what she called a "McMansion." "When we really began to see how the Big Dig was reshaping Boston, it really encouraged us to think about living [here]."

The Bichays have had to adjust to smaller living and storage space—and the lack of nature. "Instead of looking outside to trees and birds, I'm seeing people and cars," says Dianne Bichay, who had never lived in a city. Her building has an enviable location, sandwiched between the Rose Kennedy Greenway and Fort Point Channel. Jokingly, she refers to the Greenway as "the front yard."

Life at the InterCon, she says, is good—almost too good. "You can't go back now. There is a degree of being spoiled."

For Matt O'Connor, who works in commercial real estate, buying his 890 square footer was a no-brainer investment. "Personally, I don't need the hotel amenities as a 27-year-old. But it's more valuable for the resale," he says. "My parents' generation, the thing was to buy and pass onto your children. I was looking at the resale rather than living there myself."

It doesn't hurt that O'Connor lives on the waterfront, at the edge of an up-and-coming neighborhood that's only 50 yards away from his office in the Financial District. When he travels, he also likes getting preferred rates at other InterContinental hotels.

With all these highfalutin edifices springing up, one might think the Boston market would be supersaturated. Not so, says Brian Fallon, New England partner in Extell Development, which built the InterCon. "On the contrary, there are very few units that are available now," he says. The market is "very vibrant," and Fallon thinks 2007 will be a record year for sales.

Even more over-the-top properties are in the works, like Mezzo Design Lofts in Charlestown, and Nouvelle at Natick, which combines high-rise condos with a shopping mall. The ultimate twist: Condos with hotel services, but no hotel.

"The next round of places doesn't need a hotel," says Pangaro of Millennium Partners, which developed One Charles, luxury units near the Public Garden with a club room, fitness center and dining room. Millennium will also build condos across Washington Street from the Ritz at Hayward Place. Residents there will have a private library, movie screening and billiard rooms, and a dining facility, among other features.

It's all for clients, Pangaro says, who are growing tired of the hotel glitz. "What we're discovering is we can deliver hotel-like services without the exposure, with a greater sense of exclusivity." In Boston, apparently that sells. IB

AN UNEASY SUMMER

Elin Hilderbrand's Barefoot takes place on Nantucket, where the author lives.

Josh Flynn, a Nantucket native working at the airport on his summer vacation from college, chances upon three women traveling together. Two sisters, Vicki and Brenda, and their friend Melanie bring their dramatic dilemmas to the consoling familiarity of their family house. Vicki, with two young sons, is undergoing cancer treatments. Brenda has been fired from her college teaching career after an affair with a sexy Australian student. And the much-in-vitro-fertilized Melanie, now finally pregnant, discovers her husband is having an affair with Frances Digitt (archly called by her whole name). The very down-to-earth Josh becomes the social and emotional linchpin in the household: first by babysitting with great skill and heart for Vicki's kids; and later by discreetly romancing Melanie late at night on the beach. Josh himself, wounded early by his mother's suicide, is presumed to be looking, dangerously yet sweetly, for a surrogate mother in Melanie. Brenda's academic and romantic humiliations, Melanie's ambivalence and Vicki's horrific sickness and treatments all loop variously around Josh. Hilderbrand paints her characters as greatly sympathetic. Tucked into the summertime pocket of Nantucket, the tensions of winter tugging at either end, these characters' stories thicken compellingly and resolve gratifyingly.

HAHVAHD'S EXUBERANT ADVENTURE

Student-owned Unofficial Tours (203-305-9735; www.unofficialtours.com) meet daily at the Harvard Square Kiosk o the half hour from 10:30 am to 3:30 pm in the summer. $20 suggested gratuity.

Both reverent—because, after all, Harvard's crimson glow has sizzled for 400 years—and irrevere as the Hahvahd spelling on the tour guides' T-shirts indicates, Unofficial Tours has gained offic approval from the university. Two energetic students, chattering comically, trot large groups throu the landscape, pointing to dorms where president John Adams, Declaration of Independence sigr John Hancock and Revolutionary patriot Sam Adams (laughingly nicknamed the "Brewmaste lived. The tour passes through the equally historic spot where Timothy Leary and his students to LSD. The beautifully ornate Memorial Hall, they reveal, sits next to a Cambridge fire house that w required, expensively, to be built in plausibly Harvard style. In the '50s when Memorial Hall's tow burned, the adjacent fire station, equally smoldering with town and gown resentment, took its o sweet time to put it out. (OK, that's legend; truth is, the ladders weren't tall enough.) In anoth blaze that destroyed Harvard Hall, a student who "saved" one precious book was suspended for th act—oh, those Puritans. On the other hand, nowadays, the annual nude streaking through the Ya complete with primal scream, relieves tension. And the tour's a hoot.

CHEF SUSI GOES TO WASHINGTON

With a move from the North End to the South End, Sage grabs serious attention.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

I was curious when Sage announced its move from the North End, where touristy red sauce emporia still outnumber fine dining destinations, to the South End, where an increasing number of serious restaurants vie for the favor of discriminating diners. The yuppification of the North End has made it less of the cultural spot than it may have been a few years ago, but from a business perspective, it must have seemed a daunting task to go from a tiny hole-in-the-wall to an establishment three times the size. Sitting in the shadow of the Cathedral of the Holy Cross (in fact, the restaurant previously in this space was called Umbra, Italian for shadow), the new Sage has attracted a strong following. On both of my midweek visits every table was filled, starting from a fairly early hour.

Chef/owner Anthony Susi certainly had South End–level culinary credentials when he worked his magic on Prince Street, and a loyal claque probably followed him across the city to form the nucleus of his new audience, which sophisticated, fastidious patrons from this food-obsessed neighborhood have augmented. It's hard to believe that Susi was once a chef at Olives, since his preparations and presentations are streamlined and disciplined, far from the complexity and ornateness that I recall from that eatery.

I was surprised upon entering Sage to find it so handsome, almost elegant. Hole-in-the-wall it is not. High ceilings give it a spacious ambiance, while sheer white curtains partially screen walls of exposed red brick. Cantilevered shelves display colorful platters and a ceramic rooster. Sienna-hued dividers, one with an elongated wooden tray of lively colored fresh oranges decorating the top, make the roughly square-shaped dining room visually appealing. Comfortable upholstered banquettes line the periphery, with a functional but attractive service table in the middle of the space reminiscent of a classic dining room configuration in many European restaurants. Twelve large vibrantly colored and well-illuminated photographs of Italian-themed subjects—ankles protruding from black stiletto heels, a bright blue Vespa, brown and yellow sunflowers—festoon the far wall with its ceiling-height windows that look out on the cathedral. Crisp, white napery dresses well-spaced tables.

Sage's menu is compact (10 appetizers, 10 main courses) but imaginative enough to appeal to a broad range of tastes. The buffalo mozzarella crostini ($12) was simply spectacular. One of the things that made it so good, in addition to the artistry that went into the garnish of eggplant, tomato, black olive and garlic caponata, was the temperature of the cheese when served. Instead of arriving at the table refrigerator-cold, it was only slightly cool—what I'd call wine cellar temperature, improving the cheese's texture and highlighting its rich, creamy flavor. Foie gras torchon ($16) consisted of two thick slices of sweet-savory foie gras, buttery in texture and, like the mozzarella, served at the perfect temperature to enable its full, rich, luxurious flavor to blossom. The crab tempura ($14), a sure sign of summer, has a striking presentation, flanked by a small pool of avocado purée spiked with lime juice and a spicy arrabiata corn s with thinly sliced red onions and p les—a marvelous medley of tastes textures. Crispy sweetbreads ($13) re cated the crust of the crab, this time closing the milky white flesh of these icate organs, distinctive but mild flavor, with a garnish of woodsy oy mushrooms and sweet peas. Finally am the appetizers, the hamachi and sca cornetti ($9) brought two small cone gossamer pastry, one filled with hamachi (yellow tail) and the other delicately flavored raw scallops, bot portions so small as to be more of a t than a taste.

In the North End phase of his ca Susi's pasta played to rave reviews. P comprise nearly a third of his main co selections here as well. The taglio ($24) consisted of long strands of f pasta dressed with shrimp meatballs, tomatoes with their skins blistered c by blanching and garlicky basil pesto riched with cheese. The combinatio the sweet tomatoes, pungent ga creamy cheese and mouth-pleasin dente texture showed that Susi has lost his touch with noodles. Also was the pea and fontina fazoleti ($2 triangles of pasta filled with fontina ch and sweet pea purée then sautéed in a ter basil sauce with morels, those deli fully wrinkled mushrooms with a dis tive, haunting flavor.

The remainder of the main co ranged from surf to turf to barnyard. scallops ($27) presented four large b ties, carefully seared on the outside to in their sweet, succulent flavor and texture, accompanied by grilled aspar and cauliflower purée. Rabbit Mila ($28) brought two substantial cylinde tender, flavorful rabbit, with a garni risotto that was generously laced with fron to give it an exotic flavor and del ful aroma. Small green beans (har verts) bundled together with a slic pancetta provided a welcome splas color and herbaceous flavor.

The menu offered fowl of the fa kind. Duck breast ($26), smoked rice infused with bay leaf and cardam emerged pink and tender. Contra garnishes of pleasantly bitter sau Desserts (all $9) included mocha semifreddo, its ethereal texture belied by its intense flavor, with deep dark chocolate married to coffee liqueur and espresso, and served in a chocolate pastry shell. Summer fruit tiramisu added blueberries, strawberries and raspberries to this familiar pick-me-up (its literal translation from the Italian), with its ladyfingers soaked in vanilla, bourbon and Italian brandy rather than the traditional espresso coffee—simply delicious. Finally, crespelli, an Italian crepe filled with Grand Marnier–laced mascarpone disappeared faster than any dessert on our table, as forks or spoons came from all sides to sample it as a result of our waiter's enthusiastic endorsement.

Sage's wine list fetches high prices (there's no red wine under $32 a bottle), but the quality of what was offered justified the expense. Le Bonheur ($34), a South African cabernet-merlot blend, featured good fruit, softened tannins and sufficient acidity to balance its residual sugar. I especially enjoyed its full, rich bouquet. A Calabrian white, Falanghina ($21 for a half-liter carafe) provided a nach and mellow, sweet corn custard, ooth and creamy in texture, hit the ot. The chicken breast ($21), a Statler t with wing bone intact, arrived as four ick slices, with crisp skin and moist, vorful flesh, surrounded by a tasty enmble of sliced green olives, tomatoes, sted garlic cloves and broccoli rabe. nally, the veal tenderloin ($32) satisd my carnivorous urge in a refined and ative fashion. Pan roasted, with its oking juices reduced and enriched with une purée, the veal had mouth-filling vor that stood up to the sweet sauce. If e veal hadn't been as good as it was, I uld've remembered this dish for the quisite fried potato croquet that acmpanied it—crisp on the outside and t and creamy within, oozing with but- and cheese.

crisp and well-balanced accompaniment to the seafood.

Service at Sage ranged from confident and professional to tentative and inexperienced. One night our informed, attentive and efficient waiter performed with aplomb. On another, I noticed the waitress for the party next to me emptying almost an entire bottle of white wine into four of the restaurant's slightly undersized wine glasses, rather than pouring half that amount and icing the rest. Our water glasses were kept filled when I came with three companions but overlooked for a long interval when I dined alone. But these minor quibbles, to be ironed out in time, were insignificant compared with the superlative food that emerged from the kitchen. It's no wonder that Sage has been playing to packed houses night after night. IB

Mooo & Improved

... at XV Bacon, uh, Beacon...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Mooo who? A steakhouse from the same folks who brought us Mistral, Teatro and Sorellina, who "sometimes don't take ourselves very seriously, but we take what we DO very seriously," says Alec Riveros, Mooo's general manager.

With all Mooo respect, Riveros, most recently GM at Mistral, insists that "there's no gimmick about what we do," and promises the bar will never serve "a Mooojito or a cos-Mooo-politan."

In fact, the newly designed space that formerly housed the over-the-top, rather stiff Federalist has been opened up so that the 65-seat dining room will draw energy from the bar scene. Lighter, softer earth tones replace the deep chocolate walls of the Fed, and the megawine list—at one point, more than 120 pages long—has been scaled way back, says Riveros.

What will differentiate Mooo from the herd of steakhouses already in town? "Attention to detail, especially in terms of service," that's only possible in the more "intimate" setting of a dining room considerably smaller than the traditional steakhouse.

As for the food, executive chef David Hutton says he's not trying to reinvent the veal, ah, wheel. His menu will include the iconic lobster bisque created by Robert Fathman, the Fed's first chef. "You don't want to mess with that," says Hutton. Fans of the Fed's beef Wellington will find a new version of the dish on the menu, because continuity, says Hutton, is important to Fed fans. "They want lobster bisque, they want Wellington," he says. He knows, because he was the Fed's final chef.

Hutton expects they will also want a menu that offers "high-end, artisanal steaks from farms in Pennsylvania and Nebraska, about a dozen different steaks, and more seafood than the average steakhouse."

Will he offer a signature dish, say, a Hutton's Hunk?

"No Hutton's Hunk on the menu... my girlfriend would be worried!" he laughs.

When it's time for dessert, forget about the extravagant gold-dusted or Opus One–flavored pastries of yore. Instead, new pastry chef Elaine Stella, formerly of Olives, will focus on "fun desserts," says Hutton, such as a "bananas foster, hot fudge sundae and a simple—but the best—chocolate layer cake."

WINE

In Praise of Pinot Grigio

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Pinot grigio's rarely a conversation stopper: You're not likely to see someone take a sip and say, "Wow! You have to try this!" But it does have other virtues. To begin with, it's relaxing—the ultimate downshift wine. It doesn't clash with many dishes, forming a nice backdrop for more assertive flavors. And it's generally not expensive. Popularity breeds contempt, though. A snooty restaurateur once told me, "A pinot grigio's a pinot grigio," indicating his disdain for the entire category as monotonous and dull-tasting. The truth is that good pinot grigios show real (though subtle) flavor and aroma characteristics setting them apart from the field; think vodka. If you believe they're all exactly the same and it's only about the label, then read no further. If your taste buds tell you differently and you're looking for a more interesting flavor experience, the following winners of our recent blind tastings may appeal to you. They are listed in ascending order of preference.

Oggi Pinot Grigio, Veneto IGT, 2005 ($8). This is a very soft, supple style of pinot grigio, accented with slightly toasty, delicate apple blossom and melon aromas. It's smooth and clean, with an elegant fruitiness that is mellowed by the addition of 5 percent chardonnay in the blend. Italian pinot grigio in general is harvested much earlier than wines produced from the same grape in either Alsace, California or Oregon. Before the grapes change color or develop much in the way of spice, they're able to produce wines in this mode: clean and delicate. Definitely an early-picked aperitif style, this qualifies as one of the better bargains on the market.

Casa Girelli Pinot Grigio, Delle Venezie IGT, 2006 ($10). This is a very perfumed, lemony, apple-scented pinot grigio that is bright and slightly racy in flavor. It has an exciting, fresh, somewhat sharp flavor that's on the verge of tasting like a sauvignon blanc. For that reason it might not be appealing to a beginning pinot grigio drinker, but it would certainly excite the palate of someone looking for more personality in their wine. This would be lovely with a shrimp cocktail or crabmeat salad.

Caposaldo Pinot Grigio, Veneto IGT, 2006 ($9). Crisp, slightly tart and apple-like, with delicate fresh fruit and an intriguing touch of minerality, this pinot grigio is an outstanding value; it's unusual to get the flavor nuance that it provides at this price. This versatile, all-purpose white shows great balance and just enough flesh to complement medium-intensity broiled or fried fish dishes.

Bollini Pinot Grigio, Trentino DOC, 200 ($12). This perennial winner from the Alpine region of Trentino is absolutely textbook, with understated spring flower aromas, a touch of peach and citrus flavor, and its main virtue, a smooth, soft texture that wraps itself around milder-tasting fish and seafood preparations. It' also a wonderful choice with pasta in a white cream sauce accented with mushrooms. Trentino is the DOC region in northern Italy where half the population speak German as their native language. It's hon to a variety of unique local varieties, but pinot grigio is the dominant wine on th U.S. market. Expect pinot grigios fro this region to have more dimension than those from the Veneto, althou this doesn't hold true in every case.

Ca Bolani Pinot Grigio, Friuli DOC, 2005 ($12). Origins in Friuli often indicate gold-standard status i the world of pinot grigio. This hilly northeastern corner of the country was the birthplace of the modern Italian white wine revolution. Thoug sunny, the temperatures are predominantly cool, the soils often rocky. This charming wine has a pear like aroma with suggestions of sweet spices and wildflowers. Lush, somewhat rich in texture, its ripe, intense, apple fruit and tart ac are a delicious foil for grilled shrimp or scallops Attems Pinot Grigio, Collio DOC, 200 ($18). Collio is the hilliest and coolest subregion of Friuli, and the one that produces the most intensely flavored pinot grigio. This wine is a different color from the others, muc deeper in hue. It also has a distinctive aroma– slightly raisiny, honeyed, spicy and floral—tha sets it apart. The fruit flavors are similarly rip and mature, but there's a lingering green appl fruitiness that lends overall balance. Aged partially in barrels, this may be too strong for the average pinot grigio fan, particularly those used to something milder, but it strikes me as wonderful accompaniment to grilled salmon. Serve it a bit less chilled than the others.

Zenato Pinot Grigio, Delle Venezie IGT 2005 ($11). With attractive aromas of peach, apple, cinnamon and vanilla, this standout wine quite a satisfying, mouth-filling drink, much bet than you might expect from its modest IGT origins. Primarily a producer of renowned red wines, Zenato makes a pinot grigio that has so earthiness and weight, with a touch of spice in the finish. Its round, somewhat oily texture makes it a great choice for roasted chicken wi herbs and lemon. IB

Music: The Crooner the Better

There's something ethereal about classic pop standards. Performed by anyone who hasn't shaken Sinatra's hand, the songs often ring forced and featureless, the stuff of deflated lounge acts and quick American Idol exits. Success, it seems, requires an inherent bit of hep. With the legends of the genre slowly fading or playing that giant Sands Casino in the sky, purists have to stalk the reaches of the earth for their fix. Which leads us to Michael Bublé, the 31-year-old Canadian crooner from British Columbia, our northern neighbor's swingingest province. With bread-and-butter classics like "Come Fly With Me," contemporary covers and new originals from the recently released Call Me Irresponsible, Bublé will have both reformed and aspiring cool cats snapping along in approval. The Wang Center for the Performing Arts, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-965-5262). www.citicenter.com. 8 pm. $67- $102.50. —NA

The Past Revisited

Werner Herzog returns to the jungle in Rescue Dawn.

BY SEAN BURNS

Christian Bale and Steve Zahn shine playing courageous prisoners of war.

While churning out some 50-odd films over the past 45 years, director Werner Herzog has cultivated a bizarre, larger-than-life persona that would, at least in any other case, threaten to overshadow the deep weirdness and mad eccentricities of his pictures. With Rescue Dawn, we can call it a draw.

Herzog's 1970 breakthrough, Even Dwarfs Started Small, unsurprisingly boasted an all-dwarf cast. He's since worked with actors under hypnosis and enlisted schizophrenic mental patient Bruno S. as a leading man. . . twice. Herzog hired legendary psycho Klaus Kinski a total of five times (no other filmmaker ever dared work with Kinski more than once), and the essential documentary My Best Fiend reveals that these two had an amazing working relationship, on the rare occasions they weren't plotting to murder one another.

Herzog made a movie atop an active volcano; he's been arrested and tortured by third-world governments in far-flung corners of the globe; and he once cooked and ate his shoe on camera. But you probably know Herzog best from a widely circulated video clip a couple years back, in which he was accidentally gut-shot with an air rifle during a BBC interview promoting his astounding 2005 doc, Grizzly Man. "It is not a significant bullet," the bleeding filmmaker matter-of-factly noted. "I am not afraid."

So it makes some weird sort of sense that the most off-the-wall, unexpected thing Herzog could do right now (which is all he ever does, anyway) is to make a picture as conventionally entertaining, uplifting and un-ironically patriotic as Rescue Dawn. This is one brawny outdoor-adventure flick.

Christian Bale stars as Dieter Dengler, a cocky Navy pilot shot down during a secret bombing mission over Laos in 1966. He's captured and tortured for six months in a Viet Cong prisoner-of-war camp, before finally leading his fellow inmates on a bold, barefoot escape through the jungle. This could be the outline for any Chuck Norris Missing in Action sequel.

It also might sound familiar to Herzog fanatics. Indeed, the director's unforgettable 1997 documentary Little Dieter Needs to Fly told this very same story, with the real-life Dengler (who died of Lou Gehrig's disease in 2001) speaking directly into the camera and walking us through every step of his unimaginable ordeal.

So why remake one of your own movies? Personally, I see the two films as companion pieces. Little Dieter worked best as theater of the mind—relying on suggestions and implications. Rescue Dawn strips away all the backstory and postscripts and exists only in present-tense, brilliantly realized physical spaces as it lurches from one exquisitely choreographed, hair-raising set piece to the next. Whereas the documentary carried the weight of history on its shoulders, the feature is just a couple of guys trying to get the hell out of this damn jungle alive.

And nobody has ever filmed the jungle like Herzog. Ever since 1972's Aguirre, the Wrath Of God, one of the greatest of all films, Herzog has exhibited an awestruck respect for the colossal indifference of Mother Nature. He doesn't use his locations as mere backdrops—they're always complex, thriving organisms that conspire to destroy the puny humans who dare trespass upon them. Shot in Thailand, Rescue Dawn's mudslides, waterfalls, wildlife and monsoons call to mind the filmmaker's oft-mimicked Grizzly Man one-liner: "I see no harmony in nature. Just chaos, destruction and murder."

What's most subversive about this picture is that at no point does Bale's Dieter ever become a badass action hero. He actually softens and deepens over time, constantly reaching out in compassion to his fellow inmates, even attempting to spare the lives of his captors.

There's a revelatory performance from Steve Zahn, who up until now has specialized in playing goofball sidekicks in everything from Out of Sight to Sahara. As Dengler's frail, haunted pal Duane, Zahn's a visage of hopelessness, and his fragility draws out more and more unexpected kindnesses from our hero, until the two finally take turns sharing a single rubber sneaker sole—one soul, if you will.

Bale has been in movies for almost 20 years, but it's only in the past two or three that he's blossomed into one of the best, most physically commanding actors of his generation. Nailing Dengler's clipped German accent and toothy grin, Bale drops an alarming amount of weight before our very eyes, yet he still can't help but confront every adversity with a relentless optimism—the character's life-force is irrepressible.

This may be the secret message coded into the weirdly gung-ho, flag-waving finale of Rescue Dawn. We're living in a political climate where immigrants have become easy talk-radio scapegoats for every problem that ails our nation. Yet here we have a rousing true story heralding all-American bravery and heroism—one that happens to have been directed by one German immigrant paying tribute to another. Food for thought. iB

Knocked Up ★★★½

Lewd, crude and straight from the heart, rector Judd Apatow's follow-up to The 40 Virgin stars Seth Rogen as an endearing, slobbo who gets a little more than he barg after a one-night-stand with an out-of-h knockout played by Grey's Anatomy's Heigl. Ocean's Thirteen ★★½

Such an easygoing, empty little piffle you'll probably already have forgotten it before you even exit the parking lot, director Steven Soderbergh's second sequel to his jaunty 2001 Rat Pack remake is the kind of movie you go see because the theater has air conditioning. Ditching the in-jokey, self-satisfied smugness that made 2004's Ocean's Twelve such a chore to sit through, this leaner, more business-like third installment sends George Clooney and Brad Pitt on a personal vendetta against Al Pacino's spray-tanned, Henna-haired casino boss. An absurd scenario to bankrupt the house is played out by the gargantuan supporting cast with Howard Hawks-ian professionalism and an emphasis on cool. Soderbergh jazzes up the proceedings with a dazzling array of smash-cuts, time-shifts, split-screens and vibrant splashes of color, using his astonishing command of cinematic grammar to successfully distract us from the fact that there's really not much going on here at all. Clooney and Pitt cruise along in a sort of ludicrously handsome second gear, with Matt Damon again doing most of the heavy lifting as their misfit protégé. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Once ★★★

This wildly overpraised, rough-around-the-edges Irish musical boasts some stray moments of genuine transcendence within a wobbly framework. Glen Hansard stars as a vacuum cleaner repairman, busking away on ratty Dublin street corners with a beat-up guitar and an ache in his soul. Marketa Irglova plays the flat-broke, piano-playing cleaning lady who takes his songs to heart, and somehow these two fumble their way around a mutual attraction while making some beautiful music together. Written and directed by John Carney, Once indeed boasts a unique and transporting power, but only while these two are singing. Wellsprings of repressed emotion burst through the lyrics, and the simple act of recording a demo tape somehow feels like a joyous communion of souls. Alas, whenever the music stops, not a heck of a lot rings true. Irglova's more of an underdeveloped male fantasy projection than an actual character, and the romanticized conclusion feels like a failure of common sense by all involved. Carney's low-fi, shaky-camcorder visuals too often mistake "ugly" for "gritty," but oh what sweet, sweet songs. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Paris Je T'aime ★★

"I didn't have the time to write you a short letter," Mark Twain once quipped, "so I wrote you a long one instead." That thought came to mind more than once during Paris, Je T'aime, a collection of 18 quickie short films about romance in the City of Lights that finds a dazzling array of world-class feature directors belly-flopping hard when trying to keep things under 10 minutes. Brevity demands an entirely different skill-set, judging from the inane vignettes by Gus Van Sant and Children of Men's Alfonso Cuarón. (The less said about Nightmare on Elm Street helmer Wes Craven's ode to Oscar Wilde, the better.) Best in show goes to Sideways' Alexander Payne, whose first-person essay by an ugly American tourist approaches something stirringly close to transcendence. The Coen Brothers continue beating up Steve Buscemi with modestly amusing results. But the nicest surprise comes from Gerard Depardieu, who simply trains his camera on Cassavetes veterans Ben Gazzara and Gena Rowlands, letting these two old pros conjure a complicated history most full-length features couldn't approach. (In the suburbs.)

Ratatouille ★★½

It takes a certain amount of nerve to fashion a fantasy about a rodent in a kitchen, and so writer-director Brad Bird must be commended for his chutzpah in telling the animated tale of Remy (voiced by the great standup-comic Patton Oswalt), a rat with misguided dreams of someday becoming a gourmet chef. The film's central gimmick, which takes too long to set up and doesn't make much sense, has Remy hidden beneath the hat of loose-limbed garbage boy Linguini (Lou Romano), where he can control the lad's movements by tugging away at random strands of hair. Ratatouille has all the visual razzle-dazzle we've come to expect from those mad geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios, with unbelievable attention paid to every last bristle in Remy's fur, and several wide-screen Paris skylines more beautiful than actual photographs. And yet the material feels strangely one-dimensional, geared more towards the kids' table than to a universal audience. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sicko ★★

Alas, the ever-exasperating Michael Moore has returned to bleat for our attention once again, as usual burying his good intentions and some very valid points in an easily dismissed pig-pile of cheap-shots, misguided allegations, factual sleight of hand and his typical galling brand of gimcrack demagoguery. Sicko is probably Moore's least divisive film, but it's also his sloppiest and most redundant. Basically a half-hour movie repeated four times, Sicko intercuts horrific homegrown HMO stories and some startling American statistics with the filmmaker's happy jaunts overseas, where apparently all the government-run medical facilities are pristine palaces, and nobody ever has to wait in line. As expected, Moore offers no actual information as to the inner workings of the health care systems in Canada, Britain, France and Cuba, just a lot of entirely anecdotal, laughably rose-colored snapshots, repeated long past the point of tedium. Much like his nemesis, George W. Bush, Moore reduces complicated issues to childishly simplistic sound bites, seeing only black and white in a world that's shades of grey. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Sunshine ★★½

There's maybe half of a great movie to be found in director Danny Boyle's somber, initially enthralling sci-fi head-trip. Set 50 years in the future, the movie follows a bickering band of astronauts during a treacherous attempt to jump-start our faltering sun. Just as Boyle and screenwriter Alex Garland synthesized half a century's worth of cinematic zombie lore in their terrific 28 Days Later, Sunshine shoplifts hefty chunks from 2001, Solaris, Alien and even Mission to Mars.

Meditative and methodical, the film's first hour is distinguished by its chilly, adult tone and the controlled, striking compositions of cinematographer Alwin H. Kuchler. But there's a daring conceptual gambit by Boyle that doesn't quite come off: As the mission begins to fall apart, so goes the picture's visual fabric. Thus, as the plausible malfunctions are replaced by an outlandish killer-in-the-house twist, Kuchler's sumptuously slow dolly shots go all herky-jerky handheld, the last reel spazzing completely out of control alongside the spaceship itself, until Sunshine finally collapses into a deliberately disorienting light-show. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Talk to Me ★★★

Kasi Lemmons' entertaining biopic gives the great Don Cheadle his meatiest, most complicated role yet. Playing notorious Washington, D.C., disc jockey Ralph Waldo "Petey" Greene, Cheadle gets to growl out his lines in a sly, drunken purr and rock a variety of gigantic Afro wigs, Superfly fashions and assorted emotional breakdowns, all while embodying a widely beloved, late-'60s, early-'70s counterculture hero. Hewing closely to the Good Morning, Vietnam/Private Parts template, the movie stages countless studio meltdowns and comic confrontations for maximum audience appeal. Cheadle's id commandeers the microphone while Chewitel Ejiofor's straitlaced sidekick fumes and does damage control in the background. Lemmons, who up until now has specialized in art house curios like Eve's Bayou and The Caveman's Valentine, helms the picture in foursquare Hollywood shorthand. Talk to Me occasionally sails over the top, in particular, Hustle & Flow's Taraji P. Henson delivers a performance at least three sizes too big for the room. But while a better movie would've been more subtle, it probably wouldn't be this much fun. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Transformers NO STARS

Ladies and gentlemen, I present the Death of Cinema. An incompetent 144-minute commercial for Hasbro Toys, General Motor and whichever other corporate logos director Michael Bay can cram into the frame, this lobotomized tale of alien robots doing battle on planet Earth can't be bothered to make a lick of sense, as if antiquated concerns such as storytelling and spatial clarity might somehow impede upon the movie's main mission: selling stuff. Bay again proves to be our most insidious, least-talented living filmmaker as he photographs his 30-feet automatons in such shaky, quick-cut close-ups that it's impossible to discern what the heck is happening or where anybody's even standing in relation to one another. All revved up with nowhere to go, the movie replaces innocent sci-fi wonder with the Armageddon director's usual hyper-aggressive, frat-boy bullying. There's no way giant robots can compete with the shrieking supporting cast of jaw-dropping racial stereotypes, or the camera's leering fixation on silicone-inflated extras. This movie is loud, ugly, stupid, boring and mean. Oh, and also worthless. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

No shortage of new recruits for Tokyo Police Club

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Entering the United States for its first headlining tour, Tokyo Police Club got jumped at the border—or at least the battery to the band's van did. "The one time it stopped running was going through U.S. Customs," singer/bassist Dave Monks says after the tour's first show in Michigan. "We all had to get out and push, and then [Customs] jumped us, and it was fine. They just kept us in line a long time."

With the name Tokyo Police Club, maybe officials wanted to double-check the indie-rockers' Canadian citizenship. The moniker comes from an offhand lyric to "Cheer It On," which opens the quartet's debut EP A Lesson in Crime. And the name drew extra attention when TPC recently played Tokyo.

"We got some raised eyebrows," Monks says. "We did a day of press from 9 am to 9 pm—we did nine interviews in a row, and each one had to be translated with their question and our answer. It was so tedious. But everyone definitely asked about the name, and we said, 'I don't know, man…'"

What should one expect from a name hatched in high school? Monks, guitarist Josh Hook and keyboardist Graham Wright are only 20 years old (drummer Greg Alsop is 22) and have known each other since fourth grade in the Toronto suburb of Newmarket. After an initial stint in a jangle-pop group ("Exploring our instruments and learning how to be a band," Monks says), the friends reconvened in Hook's basement and hashed out the jittery post-punk jag of Tokyo Police Club.

Tokyo Police Club lays down the law in A Lesson in Crime

Now they're touring the international clubs, playing festivals from Coachella to Lollapalooza, and drawing raves from mainstream media like Rolling Stone and Entertainment Weekly, which just featured them with the Silversun Pickups and Cold War Kids under the banner "Bands on the Verge."

"All this stuff is coming on a little fast," says Monks, whose group last opened for Cold War Kids at the Middle East Downstairs and returns for top billing Aug. 12. "The festivals and all that stuff are totally new and exciting."

It was a festival that turned it around for the Toronto-area teens after high school. Monks, who had begun studies at McGill University in Montreal, sent a demo with a $20 fee as a long shot to play Pop Montreal. "It's a really scene-oriented festival where bands come from all over the States and Canada," he says. "It turned us on to making something of our band as opposed to just having a hobby."

After that 2005 event, the group recorded the seven-song A Lesson in Crime in three days for $2,000, released it on local indie-label Paper Bag Records and never looked back. "It's kind of weird how we recorded it so cheap," he says. "I don't know, it's something about the quality of songs. It's not all about recording [quality] and shit like that."

Indeed, song for song, A Lesson in Crime commands attention with its busy yet sparse, wound-up sound. Individual elements—Monks' meaty, melodic bass, Hook's high-scraping guitar wash, Wright's spooky synth notes and Alsop's shambolic drumbeats—stand out as much as the sum of the parts.

"We actually get really meticulous," Monks says. "We jam it at first maybe, but really quickly we'll stop and say what was good, what was bad and start talking about structure."

The results echo everything from post-punk veterans the Buzzcocks and Sonic Youth to the Strokes and Bloc Party. But while he admits to digging Joy Division, Monks says he and his bandmates favor the younger acts they grew up on. "The Strokes and Bloc Party are just our bands. That's what we like. Those are the bands, not their predecessors."

In any case, Tokyo Police Club sticks to a longtime punk aesthetic by rattling off songs that often last little more than two minutes. "They just come out that length," Monks says about the songwriting. "We weren't timing ourselves until we played our first show, and someone said, 'You just played 10 songs in like 25 minutes.'"

TPC's most oddly identifying element in the press can be attributed to "Citizens of Tomorrow," a futuristic song about robot masters complemented by pictures of robots on the CD cover. "It's weird how quickly people will put a label on you, like 'sci-fi rock,'" Monks says. "I don't love our CD cover. I think we were just naïve."

A better signature for the band is the synchronized handclapping on "Citizens of Tomorrow" and other tracks. "It's like a more powerful snare [drum] that you didn't expect to come in," he says. "It's a really good sound, a really organic sound and it also gets people involved." iB

The Agent Who Hagged Me

To the unspeakably rude MBTA agent who "helped" me at Alewife recently. I've already got an attitude, sugar, and it's a lot better than yours. I'm not familiar with the CharlieCard system, but assumed you would be. Clearly, that was a mistake. I was already late for an appointment and out 10 dollars that I really couldn't afford to lose, so I didn't need to be snapped at for asking a simple (and polite) question. Having worked service jobs myself, I'm usually loathe to be "that girl," who tattles to the nearest supervisor, but you were being such a total witch that I didn't think I had a choice. Tourists use the MBTA, and the last thing this state needs is a hag like you representing it.

Jackass: The Person

Yes, you know who you are, the jackasses of the world. Who—upon meeting and forming a friendship and later a romantic relationship with a relatively normal human being—reveal themselves to be colossal jackasses who did not mature past nine (that's years old). Oh yes, ladies (and maybe gentlemen), beware of the jackass in normal person's clothing. They're very cunning (although spelling cunning might present a problem); they'll charm you with funny anecdotes and tales of normalcy and maturity beyond the single digits, but quicker than you can say "Bob's your uncle" they'll whip out their inner jackass and cram it down your throat so fast you'll think, "Could it be possible that I've been tripping on X for the duration of this 'relationship'?... Because you genuinely suck dude and that is the ONLY way I could've not noticed that you are a giant jackass." The jackass, in true jackass form, will make feeble attempts to make light of forgetting, oh, I don't know, something like your birthday and maybe even try the old switcheroo and make it seem like you are actually at fault (cunning bastards). But ladies (& gentlemen?) don't buy that load of crap: You must, and this is key, bow out gracefully, thanking him/her for the fabulous time (mediocre at best in good ol' hind sight) then instruct that jackass to peace the f--- out and lose yo' digits. Just a little knowledge from one normal person to another (and you jackasses), I've got my eye on you. Sincerely,

Taxi Cab Confession

To the nice man (tall, wearing glasses, cheerful manner) at the South Station T stop taxi stand on Thursday night July 12: You graciously gave me the cab that you could've taken yourself. I was so discombobulated by the travel, the lack of cabs, the woman in front of us who wouldn't talk to either of us, etc., that I believe I forgot to say thank you. So let me say it now: Thank you! It was very nice of you and much appreciated!

—Better Late Than Never

No, You're Schmoopy

Moopy: Five years gone, and it just gets better and better being married to you. A lot has changed since Aug. 10, 2002. We went from apartment to house, the old cars are long gone (I miss Joan Jetta), I've switched jobs (don't miss those) and gained a few pounds. Your babyface isn't quite so "Richie Cunningham" anymore.... It's a little more Matt Damon. The Red Sox won the World Series; remember when we met at Fenway? And oh yeah, we're a family now too! I adore our beautiful baby girl who looks so much like you. I see in her all the love we have for each other, and treasure that we get to be her parents. She's a happy cherub. It hasn't always been easy—nothing worth having is—but it's been the most amazing time of my life. I'm looking forward to the coming years and more adventures with you and "Tara-misu." Happy anniversary and I love you!

UGUST 1 – 14, 2007

EO

ILY 23–AUGUST 22

re than the other signs—except maybe Sagittarius—Leos are perfectly positioned benefit from the rare (once every 12 year) trine taking place between the creative Leo n and expansive Jupiter in your Sagittarius house of recreation, romance and joy. en though a favorable sun-Jupiter trine takes place twice a year, every year, this is first summer since 1995 that the rewarding aspect is occurring in the signs that the o giants of our solar system rule. And just as back then, Jupiter is retrograde.

IRGO

UGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

ur Mercury ruler will finally exit Cancer, the closely arded sign it's been in since Memorial Day, on Aug. 4. ce the Messenger is in fearless Leo, your conversation ght become more optimistic, even somewhat exaggerated. if Mercury's extended visit in the sign of the protective ab has brought you benefits (as we assume it did), make re you secure them, especially the contacts with like-nded people and the information they've imparted. You ght not be sworn to secrecy, but do you want to be an named "source"?

IBRA

EPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

ybe it's not perseverance, but something akin to that gift n pay off big-time, real soon. As the sun and Jupiter, the rgest of the major planetary players, form a supportive ne aspect, some Libras will receive a substantial payoff, ecifically in the coin of the realm. Others might become, if t quite famous, then better-known among their peers and re familiar with the power of the media. It's a win-win uation that should keep you occupied during your Venus ler's slow and winding trip through retrograde.

CTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

sh might actually come to shove when your assertive ars coruler tries to energize immutable Saturn in your reer midheaven. Maybe it'll be you, maybe an ally who'll tempt to nudge a respected elder closer to your point of ew. But since Scorpios don't handle frustration well, nor e they inclined to compromise, it's better to let someone se do the negotiating. For a more favorable outcome, wait nother week for the supportive trine between Saturn and uto, your other coruler, in your Sag money house.

AGITTARIUS

veryone can benefit from the rewarding trine between the heerful Leo sun and expansive Jupiter, but Centaurs and ons come out way ahead of the other signs. Although u're not competing, you can't help but be thrilled that piter, the "Greater Fortune," is in your sign, even though it esn't come out of retrograde until Aug. 6. Until then, keep pping that the planet of good luck, wealth and wisdom will ovide any or all of the above for you to use at your scretion or when the need to dazzle arises.

ECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

nce the annual Aquarius full moon last weekend luminated your money axis, what is it showing you now? oes it look like a long-standing financial matter will be solved before the next new moon? Are you being pressured break a record, meet a deadline or otherwise achieve our personal best before the skinflint will pay up? Will you eet the latest challenge, resist it or make a counteroffer? erhaps a well-heeled associate will step in and pay the ues being asked of you. Speaking of dues, what about the nion thing?

AQUARIUS

ANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

e grateful to the partner who's willing to step up and help ut. Be it a stroke of astounding good luck or an act of such eartfelt charity, it's something you might not see again for nother 12 years. That's how often the sun in your Leo marriage house forms an advantageous trine to prosperous Jupiter in Sagittarius, the sign of the Seer. By now you may be aware that something significant usually happens when the sun is in your house of significant others. This year's event will have a lasting impact on your future.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

There'll be provocation later in the year to do a better job, to be all that you can be. However, for the time being you won't have to do much more than hang around and receive the goodies arriving as August begins. No astrological relationship is as fortunate as the beneficial trine between the life-giving sun and lucky Jupiter, your traditional ruling planet. That gigantic Jupiter is traveling back and forth in your Sagittarius house of success suggests that within your chosen field, your reputation is about to grow.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

August brings an unexpected bonanza, especially for the good sports who've endured years of razzing because they were born on April Fools' Day. However, the manna that can drop from heaven right about now isn't a joke. While the sun, the ruler of fiery Leo, trines lucky Jupiter, the ruler of fiery Sagittarius, the benefits of this highly favorable connection reflects on Aries, the third of the fire signs. You won't have to lift a finger; just be respectful to your parents, home repairmen, your landlord or the mortgage lender.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Where is this summer's romance heading? This week your frustration could reach the boiling point when short-tempered Mars in your sign tests the restrictions imposed by Saturn—not unlike a speeding car crashing into a cement barrier or, if you're a truly gentle Bull, rolling through a stop sign. Either way, you'll pay a price. A week later, as Mars engages your Venus ruler, you might be all hot and bothered again and willing to take your chances. As long as Venus is retrograde (Sept. 8), expect more back and forth.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Ask for the favor. You won't have a better chance of getting what you want than when generous Jupiter in your partnership house forms a rewarding trine with the Leo sun. Maybe some Twins can wait for the next favorable aspect in mid-December, but why put it off? If you're reticent because Jupiter is currently retrograde, you could procrastinate for a while, but not any later than Labor Day. That's when the hypercritical Virgo sun challenges your benefactor's magnanimous tendencies. Who needs more time than that to deliberate the pros and cons?

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The Aquarius full moon last weekend can signify that the end is coming, the end of the matter you've been most concerned about. More good news: The sun in your Leo money house is on the best of terms with lucky Jupiter, so if there's a chance to capitalize on their rewarding trine aspect, go ahead, take the offer, make that bet. Even if you don't win, you'll be in the mood to spread some of your newfound wealth. However, one of your hothead colleagues could raise a ruckus if he (the planet involved is macho Mars) thinks you're holding out on him.

FROM THE EDITOR

HAND TO HAND

Though they look tough on our cover, there's another side to UFC stars Randy Couture and Gabriel Gonzaga (who trains in Ludlow, Mass.). "They were very sweet—soft-spoken and easygoing," says our photo editor Katie Noble, who met the two mixed martial arts fighters, along with UFC president Dana White, at the cover shoot in Las Vegas. You probably won't see that side of the opponents when they face off Aug. 25 for the heavyweight title.

If Couture and Gonzaga are fast becoming household names, it's thanks in part to White. Since he took over the Ultimate Fighting Championship in 2001, White has brought the sport back from financial peril: It now surpasses boxing in pay-per-view revenues. UFC fan Tim Brett interviewed White about his days training youth boxers in Southie and working as a bouncer at Boston clubs—and of course, the upcoming fight.

AQUA TEEN LEGAL FORCE

I want to thank THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN for its accurate assessment of the uproar over [Sean Stevens and Peter Berdovsky's] case in the Boson's Best issue (July 11-31). It's amazing they could meet with so much outrage simply by expressing their honest opinions. The bizarre situation, where the state was prosecuting two prominent artists in some misguided attempt to strike back at al-Qaida, illustrates how far this country has gone astray. What happened on 9/11 was a tragedy. The only way to properly honor the people we lost is to give some serious thought to what led to that awful day. What has happened since 9/11 is an even greater tragedy. The atmosphere of fear created by public relations specialists, and the media, is what caused the scare here in Boston on Jan. 31. We need to give some serious thought to what it is that we are doing, keeping in mind that it better be so valuable that we are willing to mortgage our future to do it.

Stir It Up

We can't all befriend our favorite chefs, although brunch at Barbara Lynch's sure sounds nice. We'd nosh and chat cuisine, picking Lynch's brain. Now really, where does she get that fresh ricotta? Alas, the invitation to hang out must've gotten lost in the mail. We understand. Lynch, whose epicurean empire includes No. 9 Park, B&G Oysters and the Butcher Shop, is a busy woman. She's at work on her first cookbook and has three ventures in the pipeline.

We'll happily settle for second best. These days, that means taking a class at Stir, the new demonstration kitchen and cookbook library around the corner from the Butcher Shop. And so 10 students find themselves face-to-face with Lynch and wine director Cat Silirie on a recent Monday evening. Soft music playing in the background, they grab seats at the stainless steel table that takes up much of the 300-square-foot space. On top, four burners and a grill stand at the ready.

Fresh ricotta

But first, some wine. Silirie fills flutes with pink bubbly, her magenta skirt swirling as she moves around the room. "Often Barbara and I are motivated by the season, the weather, our mood. [Tonight] we felt like drinking rose champagne." Thus, the inspiration for the four-course menu, which includes ricotta gnocchi, among other dishes. About that cheese. Turns out, Lynch makes it from scratch. She shows the students how, using three ingredients: whole milk, white distilled vinegar and salt.

Vinaigrette ingredients

But perhaps more exciting than the recipes are the personal insights and anecdotes. Lynch talks about a cheese competition in Vermont, to which she brought her 3-year-old daughter. She jokes about winning, while checking the ricotta's temperature. "I thought you'd use gas," one student comments. Nope, she prefers electric.

Silirie and Lynch also share reading suggestions, pulling from built-in shelves. Julia Child, Thomas Keller, Alice Waters—all the big names are there. Customers can buy books (window shopping is allowed) Thursday through Monday from 10 am to 6 pm. Wine and beverage classes take place on Mondays at 7 pm, cooking classes on Tuesdays and Wednesdays at 7 pm. Teachers vary depending on the topic, with upcoming courses on Provence vineyards (Aug. 27, $105) and tomatoes (Aug. 28 and 29, $125).

The prices serve as a reminder that Stir's a business, not Lynch's home kitchen. But considering it was modeled after her private cooking quarters, we'll just pretend. Stir, 102 Waltham St. (617-423-STIR). www.stirboston.com.

On Guard

For many students, lifeguarding is a warm-weather rite passage. And in Boston, the hippest place to watch th water is the Colonnade Hotel's rooftop pool. We caug up with first-year guard and Beverly-native Ashley Cha ton, 20, to get the scoop on swimmin' and servin' th summer away.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: So we hear you need waitressi and life-saving skills?

Ashley Charlton: Yeah, the servers and guards rota so in an eight-hour shift you'll usually do half and half.

IB: What do people eat at the pool? Fun Dip still big?

AC: We just redesigned our menu. We have miniburge and the Caribbean tenders are popular. In terms drinks, mojitos—those are always popular. Martinis, m garitas, a lot of summer drinks.

IB: With all that feasting, do you enforce the 20-minut before-swimming rule?

AC: Actually, I learned in my lifeguarding class that t rule is a myth. It's not true at all. So no.

IB: Had any celebrity sightings this year?

AC: Oh yeah, we get a lot of famous people coming here. [Patriot] Junior Seau was up here recently. On the girls didn't recognize him and was asking for his ro number, because that's what we usually do, and he s "I'm Junior Seau." And she was like, "So what's y room number?" and he just kept repeating, "I'm Jur Seau." VIPs like him don't need a room number to ge Asian Invasion… Somervillians, break out your chopsticks! Taipei Tokyo, near the Somerville Theatre in the space that formerly housed China Sun, opened in early August. The eatery seats about 30 diners and features a broad Asian menu. A little farther down the road comes a new Shino Express location. The sushi purveyor—a Back Bay staple for the past 10 years—hopes to have location No. 2 ready by late September. *Taipei Tokyo, 7 Holland St., Somerville (617-625-6068). Movin' on Up… Another day, another reason for Upper Crust lovers to rejoice. The guys over at UC HQ recently announced plans to open shop at 631 Tremont St. in the South End. They're in the process of acquiring a liquor license for the new digs and hope to be ready by winter. The pizzeria will serve the same gourmet pies as Upper Crust's seven (going on 700) other locations. www.theuppercrustpizzeria.com.

Z Cubed?… Z Square, the casual dining restaurant and café in Harvard Square, heads back to school this fall, with a second spot in the Comm. Ave. space that formerly housed Campo de Fiori. In the heart of BU's campus, the eatery will seat 80 indoors—with another 60 outside—and offer a similar menu (salads, sandwiches and more) as the original. Owners are shooting for an early-November opening. 580 Comm. Ave., Boston. www.z-square.com.

Slurp and Slide… Restaurateur Gwen Butler—formerly general manager of Eastern Standard in Kenmore Square—has ventured into Brookline's waters for her next foodie foray. Butler has taken over the Harvard Ave. property that formerly housed Takeshima and plans to transform it—hopefully by October—into Perpetual Oyster. In addition to its namesake, the restaurant will serve a complete seafood menu. More good news: Butler recently acquired Takeshima's beer and wine license.

Market Watch… South Enders: Give your wallets and bellies a break. Your neighborhood's getting a new market—and reason to eat in. Set to open in late August, Giorgiana's will feature 400 square feet of retail space where you can find everything from beer, wine and organic produce to household goods and lottery tickets. Or bypass the ingredients and sidle over to the prepared foods counter. The one-stop shop takes over Athens Market's old spot. 532 Tremont St., Boston.

Shawna Strachan (left) and Audra Bodenstab reminisce about an era when women "shopped," walking into a boutique clad in white gloves and walking out with boxes piled high. Never mind they weren't alive back then; their moms and grandmas were, and the two have absorbed that generation's stories and photos. With their new shop Looc (a French slang word pronounced like the guy's name), the duo has brought together old-school timeless elegance and European flair. The whitewashed wide-plank flooring, striped awning and canvas sailcloth curtains provide the perfect backdrop for their mix of New York and Parisian designs, which are priced from $60 to $600. Bodenstab and Strachan, preppy and perfectly styled, personify the concept, which they describe as Nantucket meets the French Riviera, or Ralph Lauren meets Chloè. Asserts Strachan, "Women should be able to toss a bunch of pieces from their wardrobes into a bag and jet off to the Vineyard, New York City or Paris looking appropriately beautiful." Convinced that's possible by their sheer enthusiasm, we get what exactly the word "looc" is slang for. It's cool… spelled backwards. Looc, 12 Union Park, South End (617-357-5333). —Marni Elyse Katz

IMPROPER REPORTS

Get High

Know when you peek out the plane's window, as your flight descends toward Logan, and Boston looks so lovely? You don't have to wait until your next trip to get that bird's-eye view. Appreciate the city from up high—and get a natural high—with these extreme sports.

Ballooning

Bella Via, 9 Bates Ave., Worcester (508-853-6101).

Bella Via's balloons let passengers gaze down on the city's skyline. Timed with nine-to-fivers in mind, take-offs occur a half hour after sunrise and two hours before sunset. One-and-a-half hours in the air: $225.

Flight Instruction

East Coast Aero Club, 200 Hanscom Drive, Suite 111, Civil Air Terminal, Bedford (781-274-6322).

Keep your hands on 10 and two during your stint in the cockpit. But first a one-hour course on departure and landing procedures. You'll learn the basic ups, downs and turns of flying. One hour of airtime in a two- or four-passenger plane: $45–$50.

Hang Gliding

Morningside Flight Park, 357 Morningside Lane, Charlestown, N.H. (603-542-4416).

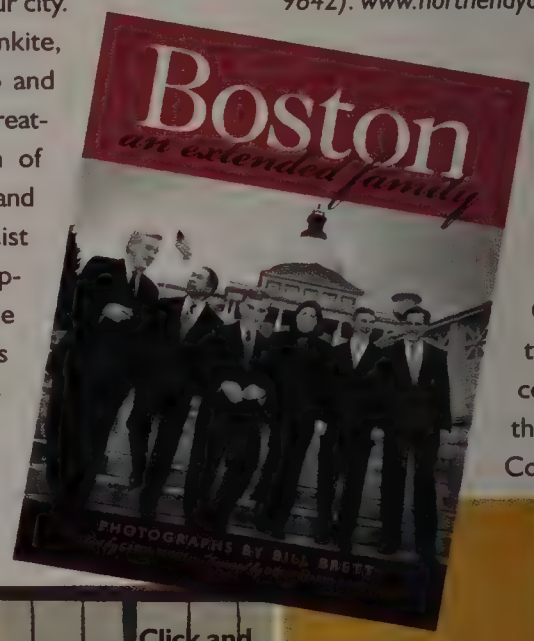
On a clear day you can see 100 miles out to Mount Washington, soaring 2,500 feet over the ground. Lift-offs run from early morning until the sun goes down. Tandem launch, 20 minutes in the air: $145; if you want to fly solo, consider the two-day introductory training program: $225–$275.

Parasailing

Dennis Parasail, Sesuit Marina West, Town Docks, East Dennis (508-385-UFLY).

Cover land, sky and sea in one shot as you float 300 feet over the water, with a view as far as Provincetown 40 miles inland. Cool off in Cape Cod Bay afterwards, with a "toe dip" on your way down. Ten to 12 minutes air time: $80.

Sky Diving



Jumptown, 80 Airport Road, Orange (800-890-JUMP).

Those other options sound like child's play? Jump out of a plane at 13,500 feet for 50 seconds of free fall followed by eight minutes of parachute landing. Once hooked, you can get certified to go solo, fly hundreds of feet higher or take on synchronized jumps. Tandem jumps: $200–$215. —Courtney A. White

THE JOY OF TEXT

OMG. But Y R U hooked?

Recently I was in Manhattan and I needed to get in touch with my friend, Ned, while driving through Midtown. Problem is, driving-while-phoning is illegal in New York and my phone is so primitive it thinks Bluetooth is a punchline involving Smurfette. You've heard of the Motorola Razr? My phone is the Safety Scizzrz.

But the Brick does have text-messaging capability, so, quicker than you can say hit-and-run, I was covertly tapping out a message in between traffic lights. Texting while driving is completely idiotic, but it's also prevalent to the point that electronics companies are figuring out ways to capitalize on it. One local speech-recognition company called Nuance is working on software that will translate your spoken words into text messages as you drive. And Ford just introduced a media system on its new cars that will read you your incoming texts. Perfect.

Because if I were going to be late for dinner, I wouldn't want to call you and say I'd be late for dinner. I'd want my car to get in touch with your car and have your car read you the message. The great thing about text messages is that nothing more than the minimum amount of information is expected. I don't need to explain that I ended up getting a few more lap dances than I intended at the Foxy Lady, and then there was a dispute over the bill… and anyway, now someone named Trixxie has a lien on the car. It's just "L8 4 dinner see u soon." End of story.

Of course, everyone knows text messages are great for conveying excuses, but why else do we laboriously type out sentiments that could more easily be communicated through the miracle of the telephone? To see if I could find an answer, I opened up my phone's text archive to investigate what I've been texting about for the past year or so. The answer: I don't have a clue.

Unlike e-mail, there's no thread you can follow with text messages. They're disembodied snapshots of your life. Why, on Nov. 10, 2006, did I send my wife a message reading, "Mustache party!"? What was my friend Millman talking about when he sent me the message, "Nice! Monkey pushups!"? I wish I knew, because that's something I'd like to see.

Some of my incoming messages are easier to decipher. For instance, I know that my friend Kara relies on text messages to cheat at trivia games. The first two text messages I ever received from Kara were, "When did Something About Mary come out?" and "White guy. Point guard for Duke I think. 3 or 4 syllable last name. 3 or 4 years ago. Who is it?" The third one came after I stayed at her apartment in Miami: "Did you leave a bottle of Goldschlager, 12 South Beach towels and a mix CD?" As sure as Mike Dunleavy's a white guy from Duke, I did.

Most text messages are mystifying once you've forgotten their context, but some tell their own stories. Last winter, my IMPROPER colleague, Rich, sent me a message reading, "I just witnessed a legitimate fight between a dog and a goose in the middle of a frozen pond in Boston Common.… Awesome." I mean, if that's not cause to write a text message, I don't know what is. Further text explication revealed that Rich tried to get a photo of this confrontation, but he couldn't get close enough on the thin ice and he was afraid he'd fall in and his family would have to explain to everyone that he drowned in the swan pond trying to take a photo of a dog fighting a goose. Without text messaging, I might not have been informed of any of that at the time I needed to know it—as it was happening.

Scott seems to be one of the most prolific texters I know, and while a significant number of his messages are aimed at chastising me for bailing on something ("Hammer on a pair" and "Husbands play golf. Wives pick up their moms at the airport" are two examples from my inbox archive), others serve merely to share an enlightening moment. For instance, one message included a photo of a med school anatomy textbook illustration, along with the words, "Seriously. This is what I'm studying right now. Recognize it?" I believe my response pertained to his sister and how much they pay her to model for med school textbooks.

Last month, I exceeded my text-message allowance and racked up a $10 surcharge. After reviewing my messages, I can see why: I've got lots of extremely important things to talk about. Mustache party! IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

First Kiss

Who can remember the gal?
But oh, the car.

I've never said this in a column, but I love women. I have countless female buddies and clients whom I treasure. The vast majority care nothing about cars except as a means to get from one place to another. (If it's a "green" car, like a Prius, so much the better.) But I asked a number of men recently if they recalled the name of the person with whom they shared their first kiss. Almost half didn't. All of them remembered their first car, however; how much it cost, its quirkiest features. So, I guess, this is mostly a column for the guys.

If you were asked to define America in the last hundred years using just one word, I think that word might be "car." We're in love with our cars in this country—partially, I think, because it's the one place where we can really be alone. We can think in peace. We can listen to the tunes only we can stand.

Every guy I know has a car story. Here's one for the books: "Do people go parking anymore?" my friend Alan asked me. "God, I can remember in high school going to BC Night School with dates after sandwiches at Jack and Marion's Deli in Coolidge Corner." (BC Night School was what we called the area around the Chestnut Hill reservoir. It was also the site of the "submarine races"… but that's for another column.) "Girls wore so much armor under their clothes in those days, you couldn't tell if you were getting anywhere at all." Of course, even years after high school, guys use the same terminology, never outgrowing it. This is a part of why women, in fact, rule our lives. They grew out of adolescence; we never did.

Alan pursued a beauty named Barbara for a long time, dedicating his basketball games to her, helping her with algebra, buying her candy. Finally she agreed to a date. "But only if we go to a movie," she said. "I don't hold hands. We have to go to Jack and Marion's, and I can order whatever I want. And," she said, "we have to double date with Pearl." Pearl was Barbara's best friend, known to all as one of the biggest "makeout artists" in high school. Her current boyfriend was Lennie Baer, who wore green suede shoes and slicked-back hair like the Fonz on Happy Days. "What we do for fantasy," Alan said. "So off we go on the double date, the movie, then Jack and Marion's, where Barbara orders a Fresser's Dream sandwich with, like, 20 kinds of meat—my allowance for three weeks. The good thing about all this was that Lennie and Pearl would want to head right for BC Night School afterwards."

Alan went on: "'We can talk,' Barbara said to me. 'Whisper to each other. But we can't turn around and look. At them.'"

"So it was all doomed," I said. "Right?"

"If doomed can be balanced by funny, it's OK," Alan said. "But only in retrospect.

"Of course, I was driving," he continued, "my father's Oldsmobile, and I headed right for the reservoir, checking the rearview mirror every 11 seconds. We pulled into a great spot away from the other cars even though Pearl and Lennie were oblivious. My date is singing along quietly [to the radio] while I'm trying to fiddle with her little white collar thinking it was a good beginning. The radio wasn't making as much noise as what was coming from the backseat, when a big bright light shone through the window, followed by a banging on the glass. Lennie quickly sat up, rolled down his back window and said, 'What is this? Do you know who my father is?'

"The back door was jerked open. 'OK wise guy, out of the car.'

"My door was opened, too. 'Do you know who my father is?' Barbara also said to the cop. No two things infuriate a cop more than (1) entitlement and (2) wiseass responses. It all had a predictable end," Alan added. "We were released with warning that our parents would be called, Lennie groveling, Barbara crying and Pearl something coming on to the cop, which actually got us dismissed. Lots of lessons in the evening, including this: Having Daddy's Oldsmobile doesn't mean it's gonna get you anywhere in life."

I actually don't remember my first real kiss. But the car was a Volkswagen Bug. It cost $1,200, and it came with no heat, a spare gas tank and an accelerator pedal that seemed like a large ball bearing. But a buck of regular gas got you where you were going and usually back. The VW was probably the most satisfying car of my life, because it was pure. All the cars I've owned since then had more to do with romanticism and insecurity than the liberation represented by the Bug. I have a recurring dream about the car. It's at the garage getting repaired, and I keep wondering when it's going to be ready. And, of course, who's gonna climb into the back seat with me when it's time. I told you this column was for the guys. IB

A MOVING STORY

COHABITATION BRINGS OUT THE CRAZY AND THE LOVE BY JONATHAN SOROFF

URTLES HAVE IT EASY. hey carry their homes on their cks. I say this because moving is arguably one of the most einous, onerous, odious and sgusting things a human has to . Sure, sure. It's exciting to find new apartment, and it's fun to plore a new neighborhood, and decorate, and to throw a house-arming party.

But the fact remains that before you n do any of those things, you have to ke every single item you own—down archived tax returns and that jar of mi-glace that's been sitting in your pboard for years because you're not ite sure what to do with it—box it all in some fashion, then somehow ansport it somewhere else. It's a bit like ing asked to build the Space Shuttle t of popsicle sticks, and it's enough to row even the most obsessive-mpulsive of pack rats into a monastic ry of ridding oneself of worldly ssessions. Of course, that's not a emendously practical solution.

For seven years, I lived in a two-droom apartment in Newton that ited my needs perfectly: Located in a nverted general store from 1910, it was ar the Mass. Pike and handy to the y. It was quirky, with lots of character d charm, and although I had to play tris to fit all of my stuff into the oddly aped rooms, it was beautiful once I got decorated. Then, in the past year and a lf, two things happened. The first was at I fell in love with a man who adually came to live in my apartment d was reduced to hanging his clothes the backs of doors and wedging erything else into the one tiny drawer I anaged to clear out for him. The cond was that my landlord and his rlfriend, who lived downstairs, decided turn the building into a single-family me (a triumph of optimism over telligence, but not my problem).

My problem was that I had to move, and I was being forced to do it at the busiest time of the year for me work-wise, not to mention the time of year when I'd rather be at the beach than anywhere else, much less packing up my mother's china. The experts claim that moving is up there with death, divorce and getting arrested in a third-world country in terms of stressfulness, and I'm inclined to agree.

The process of finding a new place went relatively smoothly. When a friend in real estate asked what we were looking for, I said, "We're not going to buy right now, and our ideal would be an apartment in one of those big, old Queen Anne Victorians in West Newton." That very same afternoon, Sam, my de facto husband-type-person, e-mailed me a listing he'd found online: a spacious two-bedroom in a Queen Anne Victorian in West Newton. Within 72 hours, we were ready to sign the lease, when Sam said, "Shouldn't we just look at a few other places to be sure?" My instinct was to say, "Hell, no!" but Sam is thankfully not only cute but much more mature than I (ironic, given that he's 17 years younger), and his good sense prevailed. By the end of the week, we'd found a five-bedroom apartment with a deck, a sun room and bathrooms that had been updated post-1977, all for roughly the same amount of money.

Once I'd wrapped my mind around the idea of being uprooted, I was able to get excited about the new place in an abstract way, but there was also that sense of dread accompanying the realization that—unless I wanted to spend money I didn't have—I was personally going to have to deal with every last bit of crap I owned.

I'm fortunate in that I have a friend named Janet with a strange bubble-wrap fixation. She loves the stuff, and she knows how to use it. In fact, I'd trust her to pack up fissile material for transport on camel-back. So one day, she lovingly boxed up everything fragile, while I furiously went around my apartment, taking art off the walls, removing the hooks and spackling the holes. Another day, I spent a solid eight hours putting books in boxes and wondering why I didn't just turn my home into a public library and reap some sort of tax break. Then there was the afternoon that I painted three of the rooms in our new place during a spell of 95-degree weather. I don't give a shit what Michelangelo went through with the Sistine Chapel; this was worse.

In general, the next several weeks passed in a blur of blowing dust off of things I hadn't looked at in years but couldn't bring myself to part with and stopping at liquor stores to beg for whatever boxes they could spare. An indication of my misery was the number of times I injured myself. There were innumerable toe-stubbings and bashings of my head into unforgiving surfaces, as well as two deep gashes from using a sharp knife in ways it wasn't designed for. Not surprisingly, all this did little to sweeten my mood, and Sam came home from work every night to either an irate Grizzly bear or a complete and total basket case. I stopped shaving and my overall grooming disintegrated to the level of a homeless person. I stayed up all hours manically crating up my belongings while drinking heavily. If my mother had been alive, she would've been horrified.

> "UNLESS YOU'VE BOXED UP A KITCHEN, YOU DON'T REALLY KNOW WHAT HELL IS."

Sam's mother and grandmother came to see the new place the night before our move. Granny brought us a beautiful, gigantic houseplant (and even shined the leaves), and afterward, we all went out for a quick bite to eat. A week later, Sam would confide to me that his mother had whispered in a concerned tone of voice, "Jonathan doesn't look very good." My de facto mother-in-law has the unflappability of a cardiac nurse and a gift for understatement. I'd become a cross between Bill the Cat and Shakes the Clown.

The only bright spot came later that same night, when Sam and I went back to the new apartment to do a few things, and out the front windows we had a fantastic view of the fireworks display that a nearby church was setting off in celebration of some Saint's Day. It was one of the most romantic moments of my life: Wrapping my arms around the man I love, despite the fact that I smelled like livestock, and thinking, "Everything's going to be okay."

But then it was the ninth inning, the homestretch, the eleventh hour. After clearing out my back staircase and the storage space in the garage earlier that day, I still had the kitchen left to box up, and unless you've boxed up a kitchen, you don't really know what hell is.

By 3 am, I looked like I'd escaped from a psychiatric ward and felt like I belonged in one. I'd gotten so sloppy I was wedging glass pie plates into boxes next to metal appliances with nary a bit of padding in between. I was so tired my eyes felt like they were bleeding. And still, this is what was left unpacked on my kitchen counter: a half-empty gallon of Bourbon, a commemorative Price Is Right clock, a pair of hiking boots, a lighter shaped like the Christ atop Corcovado, one shoe tree, three kinds of trash bags, a rock I've had since I was 10, a box of cashews and one of those sushi-shaped air fresheners that you're supposed to hang from your rear-view mirror.

At that moment, I had a keen sense of the sheer, utter meaninglessness of material things, and that epiphany might have made the whole process worth it.

The next morning, the movers arrived, and I have to admit that over the following hours, I got a sadistic thrill watching other people do all the back-breaking stuff. It seems to me that professional movers are a combination of selfless superheroes and self-hating circus freaks, but I have to give a shout-out to the guys at Oscar's Moving Company. I never even heard them swear.

That evening, I met Sam back at the old place and we marveled at all the dust bunnies and at how much smaller the rooms looked without all the furniture. I felt like the Grinch as I snatched the last Saks Fifth Avenue clothing hanger from the floor of the closet and pulled the bathrobe hooks off the bathroom door. Then I said goodbye, and we went to crack open a bottle of Laurent-Perrier in our new home.

Frankly, I don't care how long the unpacking takes. Settling in is fun, especially when you're doing it with someone you love. So, yes, I'm ecstatic to be here. But I still think turtles have the right idea. iB

TAKE 5

BY RICH LEVINE

WELCOME TO THE IMPROPER SCHOOL OF SPORTS

5 Questions For Peter Gammons

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: You'll be at Fenway for Hot Stove, Cool Music this month [see 3 Dates to Watch]. Build your dream band for us—with you as lead singer, of course.

PETER GAMMONS: Paul Barrere (Little Feat) and Derek Trucks (Allman Bros.) on guitar, Ed Valauskas (the Gentlemen) on bass and Charlie Watts (Rolling Stones) on drums. He's one of my all-time favorites.

IB: What will make the difference this year if the Sox succeed in holding off the Yankees?

PG: The pitching. From one to 10, the Sox are just better—especially with Schilling back. The Yankees have the bats, but in the end, I think it's pitching that gives Boston the edge.

IB: If Gagne stays healthy, any chances of re-signing him and sending Papelbon back into the rotation?

PG: I don't think so. If Gagne does well, he'll probably get a contract in the $40 million range to close somewhere else. The doctors have said Papelbon will probably hold up better as a starter, but the team's comfortable with him there. He was born to be a closer.

IB: With Coco's recent emergence, can we stop worrying about the Sox overpaying for Andruw Jones?

PG: If they go after anyone, I think it's Torii Hunter, because of his relationship with Ortiz. But I think the Sox are set for now in the outfield, and will move forward with young guys like Jacoby Ellsbury and Brandon Moss—who's a lot better than he showed in his debut the other night.

IB: If you had to guess, who's the starting third baseman for the 2008 Red Sox? Not A-Rod, right?

PG: Kevin Youkilis. Scott Boras would love for the Sox to be involved in A-Rod for bidding reasons, but I don't see it. It will be hard to part with Mike Lowell, because he fits in so well here, but I think they'll move Youkilis to third and go after a first baseman like Oakland's Dan Johnson, Seattle's Raul Ibañez or Colorado's Todd Helton. But Helton's a lot of money, and they'll have to make sure he's healthy enough to play.

4 Thoughts On The "New Celtics"

1 With the game on the line, the ball should still go straight to Paul Pierce. There's no one in the league (well, not named Gilbert or Kobe) we'd rather have with the ball in that spot—especially now that double-teaming him is a suicide mission.

2 How much sleep do you think Tommy Heinsohn's had since the Garnett trade? Ten minutes? We imagine he's sitting outside the Garden in full Celtics uniform with a case of Red Bull, just waiting for opening night.

3 Our sleeper pick for the season is Brian Scalabrine. He's the perfect role player on a great team. And yes, we're serious.

3 Dates To Watch

1 AUG. 17: Dustin Pedroia turns 24, making him the second youngest everyday player on the Sox roster. Manny Ramirez is still the youngest, at 7 years old.

2 AUG. 25: Grammy Family member John Legend headlines the annual Hot Stove, Cool Music concert at Fenway to benefit the Foundation to Be Named Later. www.hotstovecoolmusic.org.

3 AUG. 28: The Sox wrap up a 10-game road trip with three at Yankee Stadium, in what will easily be the biggest series of the year. We still find it remarkable that a post-op transsexual like Alex Rodriguez could so defy the odds and make it to the big leagues.

2 Dreams That Turned Reality

KEVIN GARNETT AND RANDY MOSS

If you'd told us last summer that both Garnett and Moss would be playing in Boston by the fall of 2007, we'd have called you a liar and kicked you in the shins. But now it's a reality, and honestly, we're not sure ho to act. It would be like learning Will Ferrell and Vince Vaughn were joining next season's casts of The Office and 30 Rock. Or that Kan West and Lil' Wayne hooked up with Wu-Tan It's too much even to comprehend, so what are we going to do? Sit back and enjoy.

1 State We Owe Our Happiness To...

And you thought all Minnesota ever contributed to society was Prince and the NordicTrack. Since 2003, the North Star State has given us David Ortiz, Moss (albeit indirectly) and now Garnett. So this October, when the Sox are in the World Series, the Pats are undefeated and the C's embark on their most promising season in 15 years, let's pour a little out for our freezing, funny-talking neighbors to the north.

TOM SCOTT

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Visionary entrepreneur Tom Scott hit his first business home-run alongside former partner Tom First, with whom he began Nantucket Nectars, a company that grew out of a floating general store Scott operated in Nantucket Harbor during college. Nantucket Nectars grew into a multimillion dollar business acquired by Cadbury Schweppes in 2002. Scott is now the chairman, CEO and founder of Plum TV, a fledgling network that offers community coverage in eight markets that also happen to be America's chicest resort destinations: Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard, the Hamptons, Aspen, Miami, Sun Valley, Telluride and Vail. A Maryland native, Scott's first business venture was selling provisions to people stuck in long gas lines. After graduating from Brown University with a bachelor's in American civilization, he and First founded Nantucket Nectars. In 1998, Scott invested in Nantucket Television, which has grown into Plum TV. In addition, Plum owns and operates such events as the Martha's Vineyard International Film Festival and Bookmark, a coproduction with The Atlantic. Scott was named a 2007 Maverick by Details magazine, which lauded him as an "innovator in media." He currently serves on such corporate and charitable boards as DoSomething, Shackleton Schools and FlexCar. An avid pilot and surfer, he lives in Connecticut with his wife, Emily Woods, the founder of J.Crew, and their two sons.

Jonathan Soroff: How cool is it that your business requires you to be in the sweetest vacation spots in the country?
Tom Scott: It would be a lot cooler if I was vacationing while I was there.
JS: So sometimes it's like a busman's holiday?
TS: At times, unfortunately, yes.
JS: Do you fall more into the category of beach bum or Type A overachiever?
TS: I used to be more of a beach bum. Now I guess I'd have to say the other.
JS: Are you still a juice guy?
TS: Always a juice guy.
JS: Favorite juice?
TS: Fresh squeezed orange.
JS: If I squeezed you, what would come out?
TS: Forty years of hard living.
JS: I'm not a juice guy. Does that make me a bad person?
TS: Not at all.
JS: Actually, I'm more of a bourbon guy.
TS: Most adults probably are.
JS: So exactly how rich did Nantucket Nectars make you?
TS: Not so rich that I don't want more.
JS: You have an Ivy League degree. How did your parents feel when you used it to start selling soft drinks?
TS: Honestly, they didn't care. They were down with whatever I did.
JS: One piece of advice for aspiring entrepreneurs?
TS: Quit your job and do what you love.
JS: Did Cadbury Schweppes screw up your original recipe?
TS: I don't pay enough attention to know.
JS: The secret to good juice?

"I DON'T OWN ANY HOMES. I RENT. I PREFER TO LET IT BE SOMEBODY ELSE'S PROBLEM."

TS: Good tastebuds.
JS: Your wife founded J.Crew. Any competition between the two of you?
TS: Nope.
JS: So why the name Plum?
TS: I could bore you with that one, but the short answer is that it's huggable.
JS: You're in eight elite markets. Any response to the criticism that you pander to rich people?
TS: Well, somebody's gotta pander to 'em.
JS: Do you plan to own homes in all your markets?
TS: No. I don't own any homes. I rent. I prefer to let it be somebody else's problem.
JS: What's your ultimate goal, besides total world domination?
TS: Wanting to make the world a better place. When you talk about the money thing, that's a question I'm always asked. I lived in Nantucket, so I didn't really pay attention to that. It was just sort of there, and it didn't really mean anything one way or the other. But the first things we really covered on Plum were the piping plovers and the effort to build a ramp to a kids' beach. That's what I got off on, and it turned out that because there were a lot of rich people on Nantucket, it was of interest to them, too.
JS: Who's your mentor?
TS: This might sound strange, but Bob Dylan. His honesty and courage are really admirable.
JS: Business person you'd most like to emulate?
TS: Mine's been Steve Jobs, certainly since '84. He's tenacious. He focuses on the human side of it. He tries to make things people really like. I feel like he's a product guy first, and someone who made a lot of money second.
JS: Are you the next Ted Turner or Rupert Murdoch?
TS: I doubt it. Truthfully, I don't know what they do every day, so I couldn't say.
JS: One person you'd most like to endorse Plum?
TS: Steve Jobs.
JS: Any chance of you hiring Anderson Cooper away from CNN?
TS: Not a chance.
JS: What do you think of Drew Carey replacing Bob Barker on The Price Is Right*?*
TS: The Price Is Right will always be about Bob.
JS: TV show you never miss?
TS: 30 Rock. I love it.
JS: You used to do your own ads. Isn't that the kiss of death?
TS: It worked for us, so I guess not.
JS: One person in your career who most inspired you?
TS: Tom First.
JS: What's he up to?
TS: Running a water business, O water. We're still tight.
JS: Who most intimidated you?
TS: Mike Egan. He used to run Alamo Rent-a-Car. He was our investor, and he was incredibly sharp.
JS: Describe Plum's average viewer.
TS: Optimistic. Relaxed. And breathi some good air.
JS: Do you think Nantucket's been ruined b all the vulgar billionaires?
TS: No. Nantucket will long outlast t money and everything else.
JS: Isn't Martha's Vineyard better?
TS: I don't know. We're having our a nual meeting out there, so I'll let y know afterward. But all of our mark sort of have that thing you'd be looki for, it's that thing that attracts peo to it.
JS: Do you have ACK stickers on every car you own?
TS: No I've never had one. They're d nitely not my thing.
JS: Do you have a Black Dog T-shirt?
TS: Nope. I probably would, but I just d own one.
JS: Is Plum the Al Jazeera of rich people's playgrounds?
TS: No. We're the NPR for TV.
JS: Any chance we'll see Plum TV Dubuq or Plum TV Cleveland?
TS: Yeah. It could end up just about a where. The essence right now is that about community. Right now, it's c munities that are relaxed. We di telethon for Island Affordable Hous and raised about half a million bucks, that was fun.
JS: What are the odds of a start-up TV/me company succeeding?
TS: Don't know. Probably not very good
JS: What makes you think you'll succeed?
TS: Trying hard, and by not being too c dent that we will.
JS: Last question—finish this sentence: Wi life gives you lemons…
TS: Sell lemonade. IB

Fight Club

INTERVIEW BY TIM BRETT PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCIS & FRANCIS

Pres[illegible] of the Las Vegas–base[illegible]ed martial arts orga[illegible]on—the Ultimate Fighting Championship—Dana White's no stranger to Boston, having spent time training youth boxers in Southie while attending UMass Boston. But now he's in the big leagues. In 2001, the former amateur boxer–turned–fight promoter teamed up with Las Vegas casino owners Frank and Lorenzo Fertitta III to buy a nearly bankrupt UFC for $2 million. Since then, White has helped turn the UFC into the country's fastest-growing sport, and in 2006 the organization grossed more pay-per-view revenues than any other promotion. We caught up with White as the UFC prepares for its next main event, Gonzaga/Couture, on Aug. 25 in Las Vegas.

Did you ever imagine this sport would catch on like it has when you put together a business plan with Lorenzo and Frank Fertitta III in six years ago? Yes, we did. We believed in this thing, and we thought we could get it to this point. Did it happen a lot quicker than we expected? Yeah, maybe, but we actually thought pay-per-view would take off a lot faster than it did, too.

Your Spike TV reality show, which has featured Boston-based fighters such as Kenny Florian, Joseph Lauzon and Alex Karalexis, just finished its fifth season. How much do you credit "free TV" publicity for the explosion of this sport? I completely credit television for exploding it. Back in the day, you used to watch all the big fights on ABC's Wide World of Sports, and after that USA Tuesday Night Fights. On USA Tuesday Night Fights you used to see Riddick Bowe, Lennox Lewis, Roy Jones Jr., Fernando Vargas—you name it, all the big pay-per-view stars fought on Tuesday Night Fights. I wanted to bring that back to television; I wanted to bring back real fights with great fighters.

The UFC now surpasses boxing in pay-per-view revenues. Why do you think this is happening? Because it's the most exciting sport in the world.

As a former amateur boxer who taught at youth boxing leagues in South Boston, do you think boxing is a dying sport? It is dying. Boxing is in big trouble. The worst part of the people who control boxing is they're in complete denial. Bob Arum and Don King have completely destroyed the sport of boxing.

Safety is a huge concern for this sport, which has been described many times as "human cockfighting." What steps do you take to prevent major injuries? Even back in the crazy days, when there were no rules, there has never been a death or a serious injury in the UFC. Boxing has about six deaths a year on average. Polo can't even say they don't have any deaths. High school football, you'd be shocked to see how many kids die. Every state we go to, we fall under the state's restrictions for drug testing, the same medical requirements as professional boxing.

You've had fights in London and Northern Ireland so far this year. Any more plans for expansion overseas? On Sept. 8 we're going to be in London again. They just built the new O2 arena, and we're almost sold out already.

With the price of pay-per-view on the rise, do you have any plans for shifting fights to "free TV"? That fight I just mentioned in London is going to be free on Spike TV.

Do you plan on bringing UFC to Boston soon? You have no idea how bad I want to do that; I really do. It's coming. Hang in there, I'm working on it.

What were some of the jobs you had while living in Boston? I was a bouncer at the Black Rose, bellman at the Boston Harbor Hotel and Four Seasons. Out in Wakefield, there was a company called EJ Paving. We used to pave roads and do curbs—it was the hardest job I ever had in my life. This was the job that taught me what real work was.

You've said the Red Sox winning the World Series was your favorite moment in sports. Do you think this year's team will make another run for the World Series? We're all out here chirping [that] the Red Sox are still up on the Yankees, and I'm saying, don't start chirping—it isn't September yet. Living in Boston as long as I did, I really only care about the Red Sox and Patriots. It's a fun time to be a Boston sports fan.

Boston's own Joe Rogan is the commentator for UFC, and at times he seems to be more fired up than the fighters themselves. What makes Joe a UFC expert? Isn't he a comedian? Joe is a bad dude; Joe has been training in martial arts his whole life. He is a phenomenal jujitsu guy. He's a complete psycho. Not only a psycho fan of the UFC, but he trains in it, too.

Celebrities are flocking to your fights in Vegas and Anaheim. What's the most outrageous request you've heard? It's funny how many people are UFC fans. We've had everyone from Kid Rock to Kevin James to Michael Clarke Duncan. I'm sitting in my office one day and the girl comes in [with a call from a celebrity saying] MGM won't give him tickets. His name is Lee Majors. They won't give him f---ing tickets? The Six Million Dollar Man?! The Fall Guy, the first guy ever to be with Farrah Fawcett?! Yeah, I'll give him tickets.

Do women watch the UFC? Fox just did a big study on how many women watch the UFC. Women are planning girls' trips to Vegas to watch the UFC. We never expected that when we were building this model.

There seem to be numerous "minor leagues" (Bodog, IFL, etc.) popping up on TV. Do you feel any competitive pressure from them? Not at all; they're not competitors of mine. Every weekend in this country—actually, all over the world—there are fights happening. I need those guys; I need those smaller leagues. All these guys that are fighting in these smaller leagues are going to fight in the UFC someday.

Heavyweight champion Randy Couture is fighting Ludlow's Gabriel Gonzaga Aug. 25 for the heavyweight title. I'm still having nightmares about Gonzaga's knockout kick to one of the most feared fighters, Mirko Cro Cop. Do you think this kid has a shot at Randy? I think this kid is absolutely dangerous. He's good everywhere: He's good on the ground; he's good standing up. He's a true heavyweight. The thing about Couture is he's the master of coming up with game plans. He's good at picking out guys' weaknesses and strengths. It's going to be a very interesting fight.... Couture's 43 years old, and he's one of the most incredible athletes I've ever met. He's an inspiration for anything you do.

UFC fighter Tito Ortiz and you don't see eye to eye. In fact, he challenged you to a boxing match. Was that for real? Yeah, it was for real. I'm pretty comfortable with my lifestyle right now. I like going out to dinner. I like doing stuff; I would never have trained the way I did for this thing if it wasn't for real. He's a real knucklehead.

I know you've scouted Boston talent for upcoming shows and fights. Any advice for fighters who want a shot at the UFC? Peter Welch, who was one of the boxing coaches on the Ultimate Fighter series, is opening a big mixed martial arts gym in Southie. The inner city kids that want to get into it can start training in Southie. If people want to learn MMA, there's a school in the city and outside the city now.

What's your favorite part of being president of the UFC? Be honest: Is it the Octagon Girls? No, my favorite part is everything. I like the fact that we built this company, and it was a fun process. I wake up in the morning being just as excited as I was six years ago to go to work. I like a lot of the fighters and being at the fights. Everything you see is all approved by me. It's my direction and my vision. I'm still just as excited as the fans when these fighters come out. IB

The worst part of the people who control boxing is they're in complete denial. Bob Arum and Don King have completely destroyed the sport of boxing.

Drinks, With Food

Cocktails take center stage in this final feast for summer

WARM WEATHER makes us want to drink. And not just beer and wine. With newly picked produce gracing glasses as well as plates, cocktails have commanded our attention this summer. Before the season ends, why not prepare a blowout meal that centers on the booze? Your friends will be oh-so-grateful.

To make it easy on you, we consulted talented chef Rachel Klein and her crew at Harvard Square's Om Restaurant for a simple menu that features a trio of courses and cocktails. "Seasonality plays a huge part in what we do in both the restaurant and in the bar," says sous chef Michael Madden, who tested the recipes for us.

So grab your mixer and muddling tools. Here goes. Drinking while cooking is encouraged.

FIRST COURSE
Heirloom Tomato Salad and Grilled Manouri Cheese
Serves 6

BASIL PURÉE
- 2 cups basil leaves
- 1 cup spinach
- 1 clove garlic
- 1 pinch salt
- ½ teaspoon granulated sugar
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil

1. Blanch basil and spinach in salted boiling water. Shock in ice bath. Squeeze out water and rough chop. 2. Place garlic, sugar and olive oil in blender and make paste. Add basil and spinach and purée until smooth. Add extra oil if needed. Season with salt.

LEMON VINAIGRETTE
- ½ cup lemon juice, strained
- 2 teaspoons Dijon mustard
- 1 tablespoon honey
- ½ cup extra-virgin olive oil
- ½ cup grapeseed oil
- Salt and pepper, to taste

1. Mix Dijon mustard, honey and lemon in a bowl. 2. Slowly whisk in both oils. Season with salt and pepper. Put through fine mesh strainer.

GRILLED MANOURI
- 1 pound Manouri cheese
- Olive oil
- Salt and pepper, to taste

1. Slice Manouri cheese one-inch thick, lightly coat with oil, and season with salt and pepper. 2. Place on grill and crosshatch. 3. Remove from grill and chill in refrigerator.

TOMATO SALAD
- 2 pounds ripe heirloom tomatoes
- 1 ounce basil
- 3 ounces baby arugula

TO ASSEMBLE
1. Cut heirloom tomatoes into desired shape and lightly toss with lemon vinaigrette, salt and pepper. 2. Place a nice stack in the corner of a rectangular plate and set small triangle of Manouri cheese on top. Top with arugula and a couple of basil pieces. 3. Place a dollop of basil purée on the plate next to the tomato stack and pull spoon through it.

- 6 basil leaves
- 4 lemon verbena leaves
- 4 lime wedges

- ½ ounce club soda
- Edible flowers

1. Muddle together basil, lemon verbena and lime wedges with the simple syrup. Add ice and rum. Shake well. 2. Top with lemon juice and club soda. Garnish with edible flowers. (If you don't have muddling tools, a gallon-size Ziploc bag works well. Add muddling ingredients, press out any air, and punch the bag until the fruit and herbs look well bruised.)

SECOND COURSE
Roasted Tuna, Grilled Hawaiian Blue Prawn, Rocket Arugula, Baby Zucchini, Basil Purée and Chili Mayonnaise
Serves 6

TUNA
- 6 6-oz portions escolar
- ¼ cup grapeseed oil

1. Slice raw baby zucchini 1/8-inch thick using mandolin. Toss zucchini and arugula with lemon juice and olive oil. Season with salt and pepper.

TO ASSEMBLE
1. On a large plate, place a large spoonful of the chili mayonnaise. Pull the tip of the spoon through the mayonnaise, creating a teardrop shape. 2. Slice tuna into three pieces. Arrange alternating slices of tuna, arugula and baby zucchini on plate. 3. Near the tuna, place a tablespoon of basil puree and once again pull the tip of the spoon through the puree, creating a teardrop shape. 4. Place the prawn against the tuna. 5. Garnish with arugula.

2½ tablespoons brown sugar
2 sprigs chamomile

½ cup sugar
2 ounces fresh lemon balm leaves

1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
½ cup candied ginger, diced small

1. Combine cream, milk, sugar and lemon balm leaves in a heavy pot. Heat over medium heat until liquid is hot, but not boiling. 2. Place egg yolks in a bowl. Whisk a small amount of the hot liquid into them, then pour the yolk mixture into the pot with the rest of the liquid. Stir continuously until liquid thickens slightly and coats the back of a spoon. Remove from heat and pour through a strainer; remove leaves. 3. Cool liquid overnight, add lemon juice and then spin according to the instructions on your ice cream maker. 4. Fold candied ginger into soft ice cream and freeze overnight before serving.

BISCUIT
2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
4 ounces cold unsalted butter, cubed
7 ounces buttermilk
Zest from one lemon, finely grated, plus juice of one lemon

1. Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Line baking sheet with foil. 2. In a food processor, combine all dry ingredients and blend well. Add butter cubes and pulse until the mixture resembles coarse meal, and you can still see small bits of butter. 3. Transfer to a large bowl. In a separate bowl, combine buttermilk, zest and juice. Add this liquid to the dry ingredients and mix gently with a fork until dough becomes loose and shaggy. Be careful not to overmix. 4. Drop heaping forkfuls of dough onto your baking sheet two inches apart. Bake about 20 minutes, or until golden brown.

1. Sprinkle desired amount of sugar over berries one to two hours before serving.

TO ASSEMBLE
1. Cut biscuit in half horizontally. Spoon generous amount of berries onto bottom half and top with whipped cream. 2. Place top of biscuit over whipped cream and top with a scoop of ice cream. Garnish with lemon balm leaves and more berries.

To be paired with...

The Tourist

2 cups of 42 Below Vodka
Half of one lemon
2 sprigs ginger mint
Black iced tea
1½ ounce of St. Germain Elderflower Liqueur

1. Combine vodka, lemon and mint. Let steep overnight. 2. Brew black iced tea. 3. Take a cup full of ice, add one ounce of your newly infused vodka and elderflower liqueur. Strain into a martini glass. Garnish with a sprig of ginger mint. (The elderflower liqueur plays the part of the simple syrup in this concoction.)

How to fill your hypothetical six-car garage with a vehicle for every Boston driving occasion

SixAPPEAL

IN THIS CITY, owning even one car can seem stressful. Go ahead, ask me about the time my Saab got towed for street cleaning on Beacon Hill, then refused to start at the Frontage Road impound yard and had to be towed from the tow lot. Ask me about my two trips to the body shop so far this summer, for separate maulings of my car's bumpers. Ask me about the 78-in-a-65 speeding ticket I just got in Maine, a mile from the New Hampshire border. Thirteen miles per hour over the limit on the highway. In Boston, you don't get stopped for 13 over unless you're simultaneously tossing baby seals out the sunroof and huffing glue off the cleavage of an underage illegal immigrant prostitute. Owning a car is tough, yo.

But that doesn't mean we can't fantasize, putting aside the nasty realities of Boston car ownership to focus on our abundant local opportunities for automotive fun. After all, when you see someone valeting a pimp car at a fancy restaurant, you don't think, "Well, I'll bet his insurance premium is really a downer." When you see people on the Cape rolling to the beach in a Jeep with the top peeled back, you don't think, "I'll bet that wasn't so fun in the bumper-to-bumper traffic on the way down here." No. You think, "That is the perfect car for this situation, and I envy the crap out of that person right now." So, in that spirit, let us hereby do a little four-wheeled daydreaming with six New England driving situations, and the perfect car for each one.

JAGUAR XK CONVERTIBLE [$81,500]

Believe it or not, this is an underrated car. Because Ford owns Jaguar and can't seem to resist the urge (OK, financial imperative) to throw its own parts into Jags, there's a certain brand of cognoscenti who turn up their noses at the modern Jaguar. Those who do are missing out on a hell of a car.

Even though the design was brand-new for 2007, it has a timeless look, and you get the sense that it'll still seem as classy in 2027 as it does now. I wish the front end were a little less blunt (curse ye, European pedestrian safety laws!), but other than that, this is a car that causes double takes and tells the world that you're a man (or woman) of impeccable good taste. You enjoy life. In a bygone era, you very likely would've gone on regular safaris and had gout. This isn't a car for people who worry too much about things like depreciation or cholesterol. Let the not-fun folks fret about that.

The XK's taut styling and the snarling-cat logo emblazoned on the steering wheel promise a certain sort of driving experience, and happily, the car delivers. I can honestly say that no luxury sports car has a better ride, which is something you quickly come to appreciate on the shattered streets of Boston. The chassis and bodywork are wrought in aluminum, imbuing the car with a lightness that belies its size. And the V8 motor, while a modest 300 horsepower, delivers its power with a mellow, bassy torquiness that is so completely suited to the character of the car that I possibly prefer the XK to the 420-horsepower supercharged XKR (OK, that might be a lie).

I consider dinner at Mistral something of an occasion, and the XK is a car that brings a sense of occasion wherever you arrive. Perfect, then.

CAR FOR A SKI TRIP TO KILLINGTON IN A BLIZZARD >

2008 SAAB 9-3 AERO XWD [$36,265]

Back in 2003, a wise man wrote of the front-wheel-drive, 250-horsepower Saab 9-5: "An all-wheel-drive 9-5 Aero with, say, 300 horsepower would be a meaningful player in the cruelly competitive world of luxury sports sedans." Now, for 2008, that incredibly insightful and good-looking writer's wish is sort of coming true: The redesigned 9-3 is the first Saab to get all-wheel-drive, along with a power boost to 280 horsepower.

The timing couldn't be better, as Volvo's high-performance R series has gone off to sleep with the Swedish fishes, leaving Saab the sole proprietor of all-weather Scandinavian performance. Aquavit and herring all around!

I say, it's about time Saab threw New Englanders a bone. Somehow, Saabs come off as anti-establishment, which allows Bostonians to have their European sedan cake and eat it, too. On one hand, you've got a posh, quick, leather-swathed luxury car, but on the other hand, it's not a BMW or Mercedes. With a Saab, you're refuting status, opting out of the one-upsmanship game. A Saab driver might be broke or might be a millionaire, and that classless vibe fits in perfectly with the Yankee money mentality—if you've got it, don't flaunt it.

Saabs are also uniquely suited to ski trips. Their seat-heaters always seem powerful enough to fry a hole in your snowsuit, and their turbocharged motors don't care whether you're at sea level or chugging through a 10,000-foot pass. I have fond memories of clawing up an impossible driveway in six inches of snow at some Killington ski house in my buddy's snow tire–shod 9-3. And that was front-wheel-drive. The new 9-3 XWD can shift all its power either to the front or the rear, depending on traction, and the rear tires can dig in even harder with an optional limited slip differential. Foregoing the high-speed quad and driving straight up the mountain might not be out of the question with this thing. Now, if they could give it just another 20 horsepower...

CLIMB EVERY MOUNTAIN The turbocharged Saab 9-3 is so subtle, you could be a Killington ski bum or the millionaire next door.

JEEP WRANGLER 4-DOOR [$21,190]

The Jeep Wrangler's always been a pretty popular vehicle—from its ancestors in World War II to the CJ that carried Daisy Duke around Hazzard County. I believe MacGyver drove a Wrangler, although he made that one himself out of soap and clothespins.

But even MacGyver couldn't fix the major drawback of the Jeep, which was that it was too small. It was essentially a two-seater, unless your friends in the back were gnomes. And behind that stunted backseat was a cargo area that could hold a toothbrush and a pair of underwear, as long as that underwear was a thong. Not the ideal thing, then, for weekend trips. Which was too bad, because the convertible Wrangler is such a joyful toy at a place like the Cape. Getting there was the problem.

But a couple years ago, Jeep started moving in the right direction, offering a stretched two-door Wrangler called the Unlimited that provided two inches more rear legroom and 13 inches more cargo space. For 2007, though, they went all the way and gave the Wrangler something it wanted all along: rear doors.

There is now no finer summer weekend escape vehicle. The four-door Wrangler still does all the Jeepy things you love—you can peel off the top, SAND-PROOF The four-door Jeep Wrangler lets you put more junk in your summer trunk.

REVERE RIDE Even Fergie knows the Mustang gets the job done. So whatcha gonna do with all that car, all that car? Cruise on over to the beach.

remove the doors, hose it out when half the beach comes back to the interior in your bathing suit pockets. But now it's also practical. There's room for your stuff, and when you put your friends in the back, they're still your friends when you arrive at your destination. Plus you can get Sirius satellite radio, which means that even in the farthest reaches of Chatham, a five-watt talk show about ferrets won't be the soundtrack of your weekend. Unless, you know, that's what you're into.

FORD MUSTANG GT CONVERTIBLE [$30,520]

TEMPTING CURVES

The Mustang is a car with so much appeal that it demolishes demographic boundaries. Everyone likes Mustangs. In her annoying, catchy tune "Glamorous," Fergie reminisces about how she used to drive a Mustang. NBC news anchor Brian Williams drives a Mustang GT. So Williams and Fergie have at least one thing to talk about at parties.

But just because a new Mustang wouldn't look out of place in tony suburbs like Delux-bury or Beverly Farms 90210 doesn't mean that it's forgotten its roots, and there's still a place where a Mustang really means something, a place where the Def Leppard rings from every boom box and a galloping pony badge on your car elevates you to rock star status. Of course, I'm talking about Revere Beach.

The Mustang may have the fashionable retro-chic thing going on, but it still brings the goods to impress the folks who wouldn't care if it looked like a dump truck as long as it had a loud V8 under the hood for the least money possible. Indeed, the Mustang kicks it old-school with a solid axle under the rear end, which is proven technology often seen in overloaded Indian trucks and Roman chariots. The dashboard lets you pick your own color scheme with adjustable LED lighting, which morphs hues just like your Hypercolor muscle shirt. And there are booming stereo options such as the awesomely named Shaker 1000, so everyone on the beach will know when it's time to Armageddon it, ooh really gettin' it.

Just make sure you go for the leather seats, because—and here's a little hard-won life wisdom from me to you—it's a real bitch getting Kelly's roast beef stains out of cloth upholstery.

IT'S ELECTRIC The Chevy Tahoe Hybrid: a way for a-holes to go green.

PARK THIS Be the envy of all Newbury Street drivers when you slide your Mini Cooper S into the smallest of spaces.

CAR FOR TAILGATING AT A PATS GAME WITH SEVEN FRIENDS > > > > > > > > > > > > > >
CHEVY TAHOE HYBRID [$42,000 ESTIMATE]

The hybrid game is about to change. Since I love making broad generalizations, believe me when I tell you that hybrid buyers up till now have been either hard-core earth-first hippies (Toyota and Honda drivers), upper-middle-class technophiles (Lexus) or confused soccer moms who got snookered by the salesman and wonder why their car turns off at stoplights (Ford, Nissan and Mercury). Beginning in November, just in time for the meat of the football season, Chevy and GMC are rolling out hybrids for an entirely different group of buyer: people who don't give a crap about hybrids one bit.

The Tahoe hybrid uses a new "two mode" system that can either glide around like a Prius on electric power, or shift through traditional gears like a truck. So when you're sitting in bumper-to-bumper traffic on Route 1 near Gillette, you'll be whispering along in hybrid mode. But when you want to rip celebratory donuts in the back of the parking lot after the game, the transmission kicks into tough-guy mode (which is also useful for less-illegal activities, such as hauling a boat out of the water or driving on the highway).

GM figures the Tahoe hybrid will get about 25 percent better mileage than a non-hybrid Tahoe. But for the sake of my math-averse brain, let's just say that on a 60-mile round-trip to Gillette, the old-school Tahoe gets 15 miles per gallon and the hybrid gets 20. So the old truck will use four gallons of gas to the hybrid's three gallons. On this trip alone, you've saved about $3, which means more money toward sausages, beer or your fund to buy one of those gas-powered coolers with a steering wheel that you can ride around in the parking lot.

Some people need hybrids, and some people need giant SUVs. With the big GM hybrids, there's something for both those groups—a truck that can haul your whole crew and their turkey fryer, with 25 percent less guilt.

CAR TO PARALLEL PARK ON NEWBURY STREET NOW THAT THERE ARE NO DEFINED SPACES: > > > > > > > > > > > > > > >
MINI COOPER S [$21,850]

It's the bloody Wild West, I tell you. Ever since Newbury Street ditched parking meters and their corresponding well-defined spaces, the Rodeo Drive of Boston has been a lawless land of almost-spots, those spaces where if the car on either side had parked just a hair differently, you'd be in. But they didn't, so you're not. You're still driving around. And driving around. And there's a sp—nope. Fire hydrant.

But there's a car that's ready to take advantage of the situation: the new Mini. The 2007 Mini Cooper and Cooper S coupes were all-new, though you can be forgiven if you missed it, given that they look almost exactly the same as the last ones. Comparing the 2006 Mini to the 2007 is like looking at one of those "spot the differences" cartoons. Oh, the stripes are different on the sofa on the left! The headlights are slightly more bulbous on the car on the right!

The real difference is under the hood, especially on the S model, which ditches the old car's hoary supercharged four-banger in favor of a new turbocharged, 172-horsepower motor. The redesigned car is also subtly larger, because it seems like a law that every new car must get larger. Most crucially, the 2007 Mini hardtops are 2.5 inches longer than their predecessor (because BMW, which owns Mini, likes to confuse people, the 2007 convertibles are still based on the old car). But the Mini is still barely more than 12 feet long. To put that in perspective, a Toyota Corolla is a stretch limo at nearly 15 feet. And if three feet doesn't sound like much of a difference, then you haven't parked on Newbury Street lately.

DRIVER'S ED

Proper Knowledge for Improper Driving

STORY BY NICK ALTSCHULLER ILLUSTRATIONS BY CHRIS VARRICCHIONE

LIKE ENTERPRISING WEEDS fighting their way up through a cracked sidewalk, Boston drivers have to learn how to thrive under inhospitable conditions. With the school of hard knocks as our training ground, there are certain things we locals know about navigating the mean streets: Yellow means accelerate, a well-placed lawn chair reserves a prime spot and flashing your hazards allows you to do pretty much anything. And, should a fellow jerk cut you off in traffic, a profanity shouted out the window is more satisfying, and effective, than even the loudest horn. Yet, there's still more knowledge to absorb if we're going to live up to our (self-proclaimed) title as the country's best drivers. For the good of the team, take a moment to study the playbook we've compiled, loaded with tips for owning, operating and even getting rid of man's second best friend—the automobile. You just might learn a trick or two.

STICK IT WHERE THE SUN DON'T SHINE

Parking in Boston is a dangerous game, and the odds aren't in your favor. You may be armed with a resident sticker, but so are more than 77,000 other drivers. With the frequency of lunar eclipses, you occasionally find that ideal space, but perfection has its price. A prisoner to false convenience, you won't move your car for weeks, afraid you'll never get another space like it—then street cleaning day arrives, and like more than 17,000 other drivers last year, your baby is hauled away.

Then there are the sadists, formally called meter. . . persons. All in all, they gave out 1.5 million tickets last fiscal year, to a tune of $56.7 million dollars.

If you're tired of playing a bitter game of musical chairs, it may be time to pay for a garage. Sure it's costly, but so are therapy and Xanax. "People pay $1,800 for rent and kill themselves trying to park, while they'd be glad to pay $2,000 for an apartment with free parking," says Harvard psychology professor Dan Gilbert.

Should you decide to bite the bullet, here's a guide to the—not cheaper but less expensive—rates in town. As you fork over your cash, remind yourself, you're not paying to park, your buying back daily moments of anguish otherwise stolen from your life. You're trading headaches for peace of mind, and who can put a price on that? Check out these prices from the useful Web site, boston.bestparking.com/#1

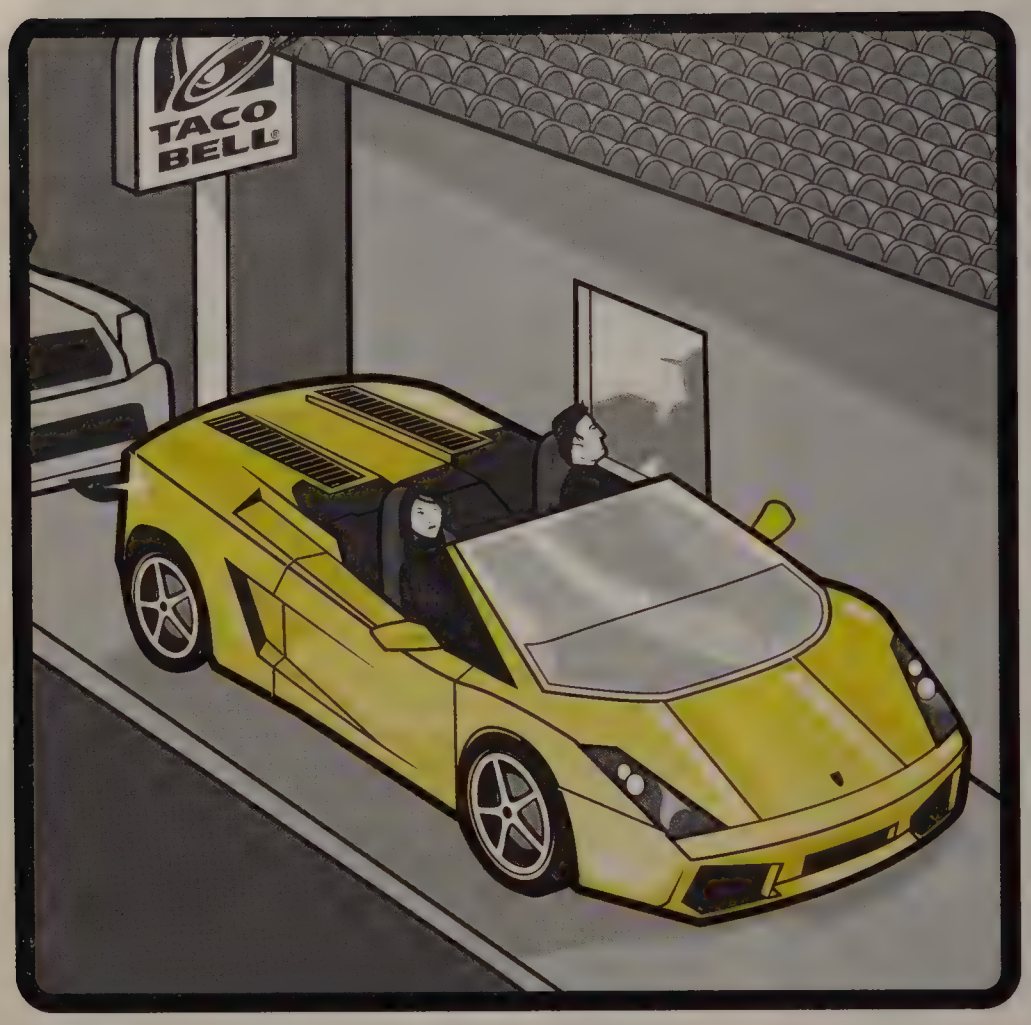
STREET SMARTS

Got car questions but Click and Clack aren't taking your calls anymore? Never fear, Harvard Square is home to additional automotive authorities. CarGurus, an online community where people can find and share information, lent us their Community Guru, Colin Rodger. A few words from this maharishi of the Mass. motorways, and you're on your way to vehicular enlightenment.



What's the best car for sitting in Boston traffic? "A hybrid runs mostly on electric power at low speeds in the city, so it will save you money on gas and offer an exceptionally quiet ride while sitting in traffic."

What's the least practical car for Boston? "Parking (and driving) space is always pretty tight, and maneuverability is sometimes critical, so you have to wonder how Hummer drivers actually make it around some corners in the city. But that's not only the least practical vehicle for Boston, it's just a universally bad vehicle!"

How can I best, forgive me, "pimp" my ride for Boston? "Adding rims is always a good start, but you should be careful in the winter because the salt and sand on the roads can really damage them. You'll definitely want a Fast Lane transponder to keep you out of toll-booth lines, though."

What's the best car for parking in Boston? Something that can park itself while I look in the rearview and tell myself how rich and awesome I am? "If you can't park a car you shouldn't be driving, so for us the best car is the Honda Fit. It's small enough to fit into the tightest spaces but has excellent fuel economy, plenty of options and is easy to maintain."

Is GPS worth it? "In Boston? Heck yes. Driving around Boston can be a nightmare, and with the roads and highways constantly changing (and leaking), having a GPS system is a good idea. [The] best GPS out there, in my eyes, is Garmin. It's a very easy to use system and not very expensive. If you want something a little more fun, you could always get the TomTom system, which has celebrity voices guiding you on your journey. Imagine Mr. T calling out directions: 'I pity the fool who doesn't turn left on Tremont Street!'"

DOWN FOR A SWEET RIDE

I arrived at my college reunion in a hand-me-down Honda I got from my mother. Talk about Wow Factor—as in "Wow, look at what little Nick has done with his life." However, as a visual indicator, my ride did save me from a weekend's worth of conversations based on the theme, "Yes, it 's five years later, and no, I don't receive regular paychecks."

On the other side of the spectrum, an old classmate, by a stroke of good fortune, had come into some money. Someone died, or something. Consequently, he rolled onto campus in a new Porsche 911, and all memories of him being a hard-toking slacker faded like exhaust fumes from that sweet 355-hp engine. Bastard.

It's too late for me, but if you've got some impressing/lying to do, Boston-area auto clubs can help you out. Be that well-heeled stoner; live the dream—if only for a weekend.

HIT THE OTTOBAHN

For $19,500, you could buy an Accord then throw a few thousand more at it for gas, maintenance, insurance and parking tickets. Or for roughly the same price you could get a year's membership in Boston's Otto Club, and do your grocery shopping in a Bentley Continental. Membership also gives you access to the $200,000 theater, the private lounge and the new bar in Fort Point where you can mingle with fellow enthusiasts. Have a drink with Troy Brown, then flip a coin to see who gets to take the Lamborghini to Foxboro next weekend. www.theottoclub.com

BRUCE WAYNE APPROVED

Say you're not in the market for a membership. Say you've just painted yourself into a corner with a Constanza-esque web of lies, and you need to be a British superagent for the weekend. Call Wellesley Hills–headquartered, Gotham Dream Cars. For $3,450, they'll deliver an Aston Martin Vanquish right to your door. They've got a fleet of vehicles in all makes, models and colors—one for each of your many levels of deceit. www.gothamdreamcars.com

SQUAD IS MY COPILOT

You've already got a hot exotic, but you want to wake up to something new. Well, my friend, the world is your automotive swingers party, and Cambridge's Squadra Piloti is the fishbowl full of keys. As a member you can rent out your fancy car (you set the price) in exchange for cash or miles with someone else's lady. Talk about pimping your ride. www.squadrapiloti.com

WHAT TO DO WITH YOUR JUNKER

No Car Left Behind: A Modern Morality Story

When I first moved to Boston, there was a red VW Cabriolet outside my apartment building. Parked askew, her dingy rear window plastered with resident stickers, she looked freshly pulled over, her owner having just run upstairs to make sure the gas was off.

For the next few years that car never moved. Abandoned and taking up valuable space, she slowly rotted away on the street like a Haymarket apple.

Her demise came in stages. First her side windows were broken. Valuables were stripped away, and other, rather unpleasant items were left behind. The air slowly leaked from her tires until she was just a spiritless pile of metal resting on four pools of black rubber, her ragged soft-top waving a white flag of surrender.

Then one day she was gone. Ideally, there was a tearful owner-car reunion. Realistically, she was hauled away by the city and pressed into a cube.

The moral? Don't be a callous car owner. Your unwanted responsibility won't just disappear if ignored. We're talking cars here, not children. You can do something constructive with your junker and feel better about yourself. Plus, you'll spare people years of watching your car decay—people that might actually want to park in front of their building.

DONATE

If you don't want your ride anymore, give it away. You'll be making a charitable (and tax deductible) contribution to our fair city. It's like sending a pet to live on a farm but without all the lies and euthanasia. See www.cars4charities.org/links.php for a list of local charities.

EDUCATE

Pass your jalopy on to a place like Madison Park Technical Vocation High School. A few classes with your old auto, and local students will be assembling and disassembling cars faster than Jessie Spano's stepbrother. (Do you know there's a generation of kids who don't get that reference? You can help.) See www.massvocassoc.org/schools.htm.

DEVASTATE

Enter a demolition derby or a double-figure-eight race at this month's Marshfield Fair or at the Topsfield Fair this October. Just remember, you're probably going to need a ride back. Get an entry form at www.jmproductionsinc.com

STRAIGHT TO THE AIRPORT, IF YOU (DU)PLEASE

There's an old rule that you need to arrive at the airport at least three hours before your flight. Rubbish.

I'm a risk taker (procrastinator). I know if my vacation can start with a screaming mad dash through the terminal and a sweaty, exhausted collapse into my economy seat, that first on-flight cocktail will be all the more enjoyable. Which is why I enlisted the help of Top Cab's Danny Duplease.

"There are so many ways to get to the airport it's not even funny," Duplease says. And he ought to know, having been a cabdriver for 10 years and spending 12 hours a day cruising the streets of Boston. With tips from Duplease, trips to Logan will take 20 minutes or less, which will give you extra hours to pack and give me the precious seconds I need to make final boarding call.

FROM THE SOUTH END:
From Tremont, take West Dedham down to Malden Street until you hit Albany. Bang a left on Albany and take it all the way to the end, where you'll see the exit for the airport. Total time: 10 minutes.

Alternate Route:
Take Columbus Avenue to Stuart Street and take a right. After you drive through Chinatown (and Stuart changes to Kneeland for no particular reason), you'll see a ramp for 93 on your right. Shoot up there, take a left and an immediate right, and you'll be staring Logan's HOV Fast Lane right in the face.
"A lot of people don't know about it, so not everyone takes it," Duplease says. So there won't be any traffic, and you'll have cool indie cred. Total time: 10 minutes, 20 during the afternoon rush.

FROM THE NORTH END:

FROM THE BACK BAY:
"After 4 pm, Storrow is kind of a friggin' mess," Duplease says. "I totally avoid Storrow." Instead, bob and weave your way through this route. Off Storrow, take a right on Revere Street and head up Beacon Hill. Dive back down the Hill on Anderson, turn right at Cambridge, then drive back up. At the top of the hill, take a left and slide down Staniford, go right on Merrimac, and you'll end up back at New Chardon for your straight shot to Logan. Total time: 15 minutes.

Warning: Chad and Muffy don't like the riff raff roaring past during morning tea, so Revere is off limits between 7 and 10 am.

FROM THE FINANCIAL DISTRICT:
For your business trip, you could take Summer Street east all the way past the Westin, then take your first left to the airport, or you could impress your colleagues by thinking "outside the box" and taking this alternative. Besides, as Duplease says, "You always got to have a backup."

Take Summer over the Fort Point Channel, then your first right onto Melcher Street. Take a left on A Street, and after you pass under Summer, go right onto Congress, which will take you to the bypass road (ironically, a direct route to Logan). Total time: 20 minutes, but in the morning, "forget it—8 minutes."

FROM FENWAY:
For game days, Duplease says, "You're going to need a good route, 'cause you know everyone's taking Storrow." Yeah, about 30,000 everyones.

Take Boylston east, drive around that dirty water called the Fens, then take a right onto Westland Ave. When you hit Mass. Ave., turn right and drive for a few blocks, then leave the traffic behind by turning left at Tremont and hooking up with the South End route. Only suckers drive all the way down to the Mass. Ave. Connector. "You couldn't pay me to take that way," Danny says. (And that's from someone who drives for money.) Total time: 20 minutes.

HARVARD SQUARE:
Take Memorial Drive and zoom all the way to the Charles River Dam. After you cross the water, a quick jaunt down Martha Road and Lomasney Way takes you to Merrimac Street, and your headache-free trip to Logan is over—unless there's traffic off Storrow. (And you've got somewhere to be, so yeah, there's going to be traffic.) In which case, Duplease recommends blowing past the bridge and hitting Route 99. Turn right, cross the Charlestown Bridge and you're on North Washington, which, oddly enough, you'll take south to the airport exit. Total time: 15 to 20 minutes, "but not everyone drives as fast as me."

MAPQUEST VS. GOOGLE MAPS

In days of yore, people got lost, so road trip hierarchy was based mostly on navigational skills. The best skipper was given the wheel, with an adequate first mate riding shotgun to handle the maps. The rest of the passengers were banished to the backseat, drowned out by the radio and politely ignored when they leaned forward to offer their worthless two cents.

Nowadays, if you don't have a GPS on your dash, all that's left to argue is which Web site provides the best directions. Many believe Google can do no wrong while MapQuest purists beg to differ. We put both through a series of local tests to determine a winner.

MOPSY

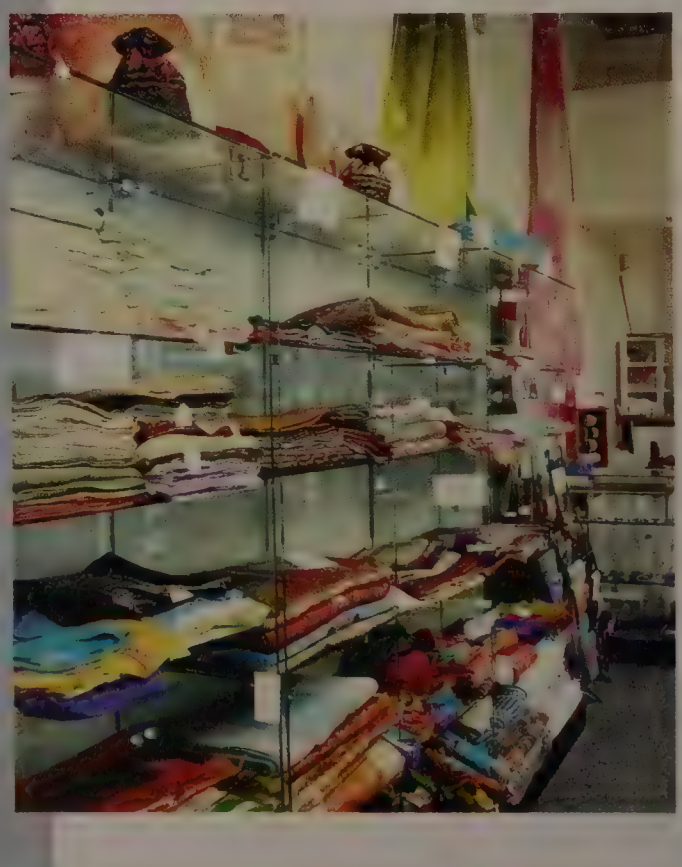
MAN IN THE CROSSFIRE OF WAR AND RELATIONS

Frank Schaeffer's novel Baby Jack follows a marine and his family in Salisbury, Mass.

Some families would welcome their son joining the Marines, but that's emphatically not so with the Ogdens. Jack's father, Todd, is a self-absorbed, adored painter of the school of raffish narcissism. And when his son shows sudden and surprising receptivity to a recruiter's pitch, Todd is wildly, angrily opposed. Sarah, Jack's mother, a Harvard Law School dropout with a reckless-sexpot history who's lived a life of privilege, is nerve-wracked by Jack's choice. Schaeffer portrays the Ogden's original, arty existence with sophistication and saltiness, such that Jack's new military identity, values and language (even in love letters he calls himself This Recruit), stand in jolting contrast. After Jack is killed in Iraq, Todd's sadness and guilt for rejecting his son's decision leads to scary, pressurized scenes of violence between him and Sarah that seem stunningly real. Schaeffer inhabits many viewpoints, including the dead Jack whose consciousness swims with a kind of unfettered empathy into the minds of various people, including his posthumous baby. And God, sometimes a cynical guy, sometimes a moralistic Marine himself, holds everyone's feet to the fire.

THE WHEELS GO ROUND AND ROUND

Broadway Bicycle School (351 Broadway, Cambridge; 617-868-3392) offers repair space and classes.



People come up the ramp into this shop of a school, seemingly cycling in from the '70s. That spirit p vades this 35-year-old collective, comprising three women and two men, in its lovably scuffed floo windows decorated with antique gears and Lefty fliers. It also permeates the workstations, where peo diligently spin their wheels. If you're cycle-savvy you can rent out shop space and work on your bike $9 per hour in the ethical, communal atmosphere of yore. Alternatively, you can get instruction as repair your ride. Or even, after a free estimate, leave it to be repaired by someone else. Many hard-co eager cyclist-commuters who want to study more deeply take classes, which fill up fast, to learn to f flat or even build a wheel, adjust bearings and brakes, and become acquainted with oily maintena matters. All sorts of parts are for sale, as well as new and used bikes. Perhaps most of all, a welcom vibe oozes from this place—both officey-types in button-downs and latter-day, T-shirted hippies ch ting technically—leaving no carbon footprints behind.

FORTRESS OF APTITUDE

Rocca provides Ligurian flavors for epicurean tastes

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

What comes first, the acronym or the gastronomic accolades? In New York, the "triangle below Canal" and "south of Houston" began as edgy urban frontiers and evolved into chic neighborhoods with upscale eateries. San Francisco's "south of Market" did the same. Is Boston's "south of Washington" treading the newest path? More to the point, will Boston's SoWa follow TriBeCa, SoHo and SoMa as dining destinations? Judging by the numerous and enthusiastic diners drawn to Rocca on Harrison Street, the answer seems to be in the affirmative.

The brainchild of Michela Larson and her Sapphire Group colleagues, Rocca makes a captivating impression long before the food arrives. A smartly landscaped patio for al fresco dining surrounds an antique coal-fired chimney evocative of the Victorian-era factory's industrial past. Inside this red-brick building, reclaimed by visionary developer Mario Nicosia, a sleek semicircular bar with high and low cocktail tables dominates the lower level. Two-story windows create a wall of glass extending from the ground floor to the top of the second story, which gives the principal dining area a spacious and airy feel. Comfortable banquettes with leather seats and fabric backs line the walls, while tall mirrors, exposed brick, nautical artifacts, hanging lamps, sconces and indirect lighting that cycles through the color spectrum create a comfortable, eye-pleasing environment. Votive candles, woven fabric placemats, brushed stainless steel tableware and capacious, distinctly shaped wine glasses grace dark gray slate tables. Giant posters decorate the walls, touting movies of a bygone era.

Rocca's cuisine evokes the rich culinary tradition of Liguria, Italy's Mediterranean province that extends west and south from the city of Genoa. Just reading through the inspired menu—a large, single page listing nine "tastes" or mini appetizers, 11 standard appetizers, nine pastas and nine main courses—starts the gastric juices churning. As in Genoa's popular pesto, garlic, olive oil and basil play major roles. From the "tastes" column, I chose the San Remo pizza ($7), a small but filling square of olive-oiled crust laden with capers, olives, anchovies, herbs and sweet-citric tomatoes.

Its savory-salty flavors made it the perfect prelude to the wonders to come. Of the regular appetizers, the senza pane ($9)—a breadless sandwich that would've warmed Dr. Atkins' heart—consisted of silky textured prosciutto, creamy mozzarella, pleasantly bitter arugula and a heady combination of balsamic and extra virgin olive oil.

Stuffed zucchini ($8) brought three lengths of partially hollowed zucchini filled with chopped veal, cheese and fresh tomato sauce, a fine exemplar of the Ligurian stuffed vegetables I had first encountered as "les petits farcies" in Nice, Liguria's western outpost. Marinated sardines ($9), four white sardines with a mild, slightly salty and fishy flavor and garnished with thin slices of radish, aroused the taste buds without blunting the appetite. Hot and sweet scampi ($13), three shrimp combined with fennel, hot peppers, fresh marjoram and mint, boasted firm shrimp whose flavor was highlighted, not masked, by the zesty accompaniments. Finally among the starters, the stellar spring antipasti ($12) produced razor-thin slices of garlicky salami and sweet-salty prosciutto, shards of pecorino (sheep) cheese, firm vegetables and fava bean dip.

If there were a single reason not to mi
Rocca, it would be the opportunity to e plore its selection of superb pastas, which the restaurant's Genoese ethos fin its highest expression. In the mafaldi alla Genovese ($10), curly green noodl mixed with potatoes, green beans a basil-pignoli nut pesto, each ingredient r tained its distinctive texture, while th minty, mildly garlic sauce rendered the irresistible. Hand-rolled trofie ($10) co prises fragments of freshly made pasta co bined with a lively pesto; its enjoyab chewy texture giving new meaning to t overworked phrase al dente. Spaghe poveri ($10) came tossed with anchovi tomatoes, lemon, pine nuts, parsley, ba and cheese, with only a hint of garlic. Si ple—its name suggests a basic dish p lively, refreshing mélange of Medit ranean ingredients. Corzetti ($14) co sisted of large coins of semolina pa dressed with a meaty rabbit sauce. Th distinctive corzetti, traditionally stamp with a family crest, are a Ligurian tra tion. Lastly among the pastas, the rich of the five was the spring green panzo ($14), handmade raviolis infused w green herbs and dressed in a luscio creamy walnut sauce.

Of the main courses, the roasted wh fish ($24), one evening a branzi (Mediterranean sea bass), scored first p for presentation. This imposing, finny p nom had been poached with olives, tor toes, potatoes, lemon slices, pine nuts a thyme, a kaleidoscope of flavors and a mas. Closing my eyes, I imagined I was specialty, buridda ($21), a garlicky seaf stew, substituted garlic for the tomat and saffron of its western counterpart fr Marseilles—bouillabaisse. Rocca's burid full of shrimp, white fish, squid and cla came crowned with large toasted crout slathered in pesto.

Moving onshore, the kitchen surpri me with the high quality of its braised sh ribs ($24), a dish few would associate w Liguria. These tender, meaty, robustly vored beef ribs, garnished with peas, oni and polenta, would satisfy the most raven carnivores. Leg of lamb ($24), tender and re as ordered, had been sliced from the tick part of the leg, thus avoiding veins and stle. Accompaniments of puréed beans hite and green) and escarole refocused us the Mediterranean.

For dessert, I tried four of the six menu oices. The choccolata bis ($7), chocolate nache in a dark chocolate crust—hence e name, which means double chocolate—tisfied my cocoa craving. Pacciugo di rtofino ($9), as opulent as its namesake wn, brought creamy vanilla ice cream, gy lemon sorbet, sweet strawberry sauce, aretto-spiked whipped cream and crunchy umbles of biscotti in a goblet the size of a all bird bath. Ligurian smashed almond rk ($9), served with dark chocolate dipng sauce made from melting 75 percent coa chocolate bars, gave the choccolata a run for its money. Finally, the walnut torta ($7) combined the sweet richness d pleasantly grainy texture of figs with e mildly bitter flavor of walnuts. The contion resembled pecan pie without the ying cornstarch filler.

Rocca's wine list delighted in its well-chon selections, with prices among the lowest the city. Options by the glass, served in nerous pours of eight ounces, started at . Of these, the trusty Sardinian red from annondau, fruity but full-bodied, showed cent acidity, good structure and smoothed nnins. More expensive, but worth the preium, was the 2003 La Bocce Chianti Classico Riserva ($37). It seemed harsh upon first taste, but our attentive waiter, observing my mildly troubled expression, offered to decant it. The aeration did the trick, opening it up and smoothing it out, making it a very enjoyable accompaniment to our food.

That percipient, proactive gesture mirrored the uniformly good service received on two visits. Friendly and polite, the staff, from parking valet to waiters to bus persons, proved unfailingly attentive and efficient. Smiles were ubiquitous. When you've got a product as good as Rocca's and an attractive, comfortable place in which to sell it (not to mention free self-parking in an adjoining lot), grins come naturally. IB

My Chef Is More Local Than Yours

T.W. Food keeps it close to home

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

T.W. Food chef/owner Tim Wiechmann

How local is the "totally local" Wednesday night six-course tasting menu at T.W. Food Restaurant in Cambridge?

It's so local, chef/owner Tim Wiechmann sautees in clarified butter, because olive oil isn't a local product. So local, desserts are leavened only with eggs, because baking powder, he says, "comes from the Midwest." Spices? Fleur de sel? Not in this kitchen, buddy.

"We've set our own standards," says Wiechmann, acknowledging that those standards are "as extreme as possible." Is this a stunt, the culinary equivalent of extreme sports? What's the point, and does this rigorous vigilance result in a good experience for the diner?

"My thinking was, people are more and more aware of local," he says. Fewer people know that "so much stuff [e.g., baking powder, olive oil] is imported at the base level."

Although strict, Wiechmann knows where to draw the line in terms of basic human necessities. He does serve coffee, as well as biodynamic wines from France.

Meanwhile, as he awaits the delivery of sunflower oil from Vermont, he dresses salads with "lots of herb emulsions." The challenge, he says, results in "really clean, basic food... I think I'm onto something."

Local Is as Local Does

Close to T.W. Food both geographically and ideologically, but not as extreme in practice, is Tony Maws, chef/owner of Craigie Street Bistrot.

"I love standing on a soapbox for sustainability," says Maws, who buys meat from three different co-ops and works with 14 different farms. However, his local-is-best philosophy boils down to "making the best choices you can," given that his—and our—location is Boston, with its built-in climate limitations.

"We have four seasons here," he says.

What matters most to Maws, who's planning a "Farm-Fresh Feeding Frenzy" dinner on Aug. 21, is to "showcase phenomenal local ingredients," selectively using non-local ingredients to enhance his dishes. "We've come to use certain products on a daily basis: soy sauce, olive oil, spices," he says. "You've got to draw your own radius."

For Maws, the radius is 75 miles: eve item on the Farm Fresh menu will grown or caught within that area su rounding Craigie Street. Every herb a vegetable will have been picked less th 24 hours before it hits the plate. T glass next to the plate will hold the e ceptions: biodynamic and organic wi from France, and bottled water fr Saratoga Springs.

"I'm not into following rules," s Maws. "I'm into having fun, making foo

THU./AUG. 16–SUN./AUG. 19

Tastings: Holy Cannoli!

At 97 years, the Fisherman's Feast is the North End's longest-running Italian festival—and this a neighborhood that knows a little something about celebrating. Yes, there's the traditional blessing of the fishing waters, the "flight of the angel" and, of course, the march of the Madonna to the center of the action. But, if you're not an angler or a traditionalist, what may primarily concern you is the food. Never fear, there will be copious amounts, even for the non-seafood inclined. There's pizza, braciola and cannoli to lure you, not to mention that most effective of tourist bait: Italian sausage. *North, Fleet and Lewis streets, Boston (617-635-3911). www.fishermansfeast.com. Bad to the Funny Bone

Apatow and Rogen deliver another summer gem

BY SEAN BURNS

Christopher Mintz-Plasse, Jonah Hill and Michael Cera play endearing bumblers.

It seems 2007 is going to go down in film history as the summer that Judd Apatow and Seth Rogen saved American comedy. Their Knocked Up (written and directed by Apatow, starring Rogen) became this season's surprise smash, the lone non-franchise blockbuster powered not by a massive marketing budget, but by generous reviews and positive word-of-mouth. Now their side-splitting Superbad (produced by Apatow, penned by Rogen) seems poised to follow a similar path, although unlike Knocked Up, this isn't necessarily one I'll be dragging my mother along to see.

Probably the funniest and most wholehearted high school movie since Fast Times at Ridgemont High, Superbad concerns itself with the two major coming-of-age struggles faced by young men all over the world, which is a polite way of saying it's all about trying to get drunk and laid. Sure, horny teenager flicks might be a dime a dozen, but let's reflect for a moment on Roger Ebert's famous credo: "It's not what a movie is about, but how it is about it." Not many teenage sex comedies can boast a screenplay as smartly written and savvily constructed as Superbad's.

The end of high school looms large on the horizon for Seth (Jonah Hill, the corpulent young comic who so memorably shouted "Shma-shmortion" in Knocked Up). He's already sick with separation anxiety because his best friend and constant companion Evan (Michael Cera) just got into Dartmouth, but Seth barely squeaked his way into a state school. Although Seth might overcompensate with wild theories about "non-Ivy league girls having lower standards," the prospect of starting a new life without his trustworthy sidekick clearly has him spooked.

Overcompensation is indeed the key to the character as Seth's prone to loud, blisteringly profane monologues, even though he obviously has no idea what he's talking about most of the time. The controversial language (a colleague called it "irredeemable") struck this reviewer as perfectly true to life—the potty-mouthed bluster of a kid whose entire sexual education has come from dubious Internet sources.

Evan is the meek one of the pair, played with aplomb by the gifted Cera as a gentle young man who hasn't figured out how to work his body just yet. This apple-cheeked young actor's crack comic timing will be familiar to fans of TV's late, lamented Arrested Development, and it's a kick to see Cera's arms locked immobile by his sides while his one-liners escape in whispered squeaks.

In the film, a typical Friday night of web-surfing and sneaking Dad's beers is put off by something that has never happened before to our dorky twosome: an honest-to-God party invitation. Seth has an instant epiphany. He's always overhearing stories at school in which the girls regret getting so smashed that they ended up sleeping with losers—this could be their big chance to be that mistake! The only catch is that Seth and Evan are asked to supply all the alcohol.

Enter McLovin. Actually, his real name is Fogell, and he's portrayed by newcomer Christopher Mintz-Plasse as such a brilliantly squirmy, 98-pound weakling with delusions of grandeur, he makes Napoleon Dynamite look like James Dean. But Fogell just so happens to have an ID that says that he's a 25-year-old Hawaiian organ donor called McLovin (no last name necessary), and thus the adventure begins.

It wouldn't be fair to divulge any more about where this wild night takes our heroes, save to say that the intricate gag constructions devised by Rogen and his writing partner Evan Goldberg spin from disasters to delights and then back again. These characters keep finding ways to surprise us with improbable, but quite touching, pangs of pathos, even as you can't believe what you're hearing. I haven't laughed this hard since Borat.

Director Greg Mottola's last big-screen effort was his highly regarded 1996 indie debut The Daytrippers, but he spent the ensuing years directing episodes of Apatow's TV series Undeclared, as well as logging some hours on Arrested Development. It takes a delicate sensibility to pull off a movie that's this raunchy without being smutty, and what leaves Superbad perched ever so slightly on the side of good taste is Mottola's unfailing instinct to keep our heroes humble and relatable. It's awful easy for sex comedies to veer into mean-spiritedness, but Superbad gets away with murder because the leads remain so vulnerable and appealing—they can curse like sailors and we know they don't really mean it.

In fact, nobody actually means much of what they're saying in Superbad. The film's goofy, humanist message is summed up in a hysterical subplot involving two dimwitted police officers (played to the hilt by Rogen and SNL regular Bill Heder). A decade or so older than our heroes, they're still stricken with similar insecurities and pile on the beer-swilling swagger and false bravado, which hints that high school never really ends. The movie is nothing if not astute about the little ways each and every one of us try to pretend we're superbad. We all might as well just start calling ourselves McLovin. iB

ry Potter and the Order ne Phoenix ★★★½

Harry Potter films thus far have felt like a col- on of tie-in products dutifully recreating body's favorite scenes as if genuflecting be- the Stations of the Cross. But now, four se- into this saga, it finally feels like we're hing an honest-to-god movie. Forced to slash owling's unwieldy 870-page novel to a trim nours and change, director David Yates and nwriter Michael Goldenberg have at last ceived the Potter-verse in purely cinematic s. They scrapped all that Quidditch nonsense ero in on Harry's adolescent struggle to wrap ill-forming mind around the fallibility of au- ty figures, the finality of death and the stink- nfairness of how the world really works. It's a isingly dark and violent coming-of-age tale, Yates finds some nifty visual parallels for the cter's inner journey. Young Daniel Radcliffe wing into the role quite nicely, and the most qualified supporting cast in history again ex- with extra kudos going to Gary Oldman, Rickman and Imelda Staunton's fascist olmarm. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in uburbs.)

ow Pronounce You ck And Larry ★

ngly hypocritical, the latest slapdash effort Adam Sandler's Happy Madison productions s with all sorts of teary-eyed courtroom logues, delivered directly into the camera lecturing the audience about the evils of ho- nobia. The irony of such sentiments arriving a full 90 minutes spent scoring cheap laughs every moldy, offensive gay joke in the book s truly lost on Sandler, who stars here with m actor Kevin James as a couple of macho klyn firefighters faking a domestic partner- in order to qualify for health benefits. In ng with Hollywood's strange new fixation, à ld Hogs, that nothing in this world could pos- be more horrifying than being mistaken for a sexual, Chuck And Larry reeks of gay panic, he only thing more appalling than its con- barrage of mincing, queenie stereotypes is a ning turn by Rob Schneider as the kind of ul, buck-toothed Asian caricature that would seemed extreme even in World War II propa- a pictures. (At Boston Common, Fenway and e suburbs.)

Ocean's Thirteen ★★½

Such an easygoing, empty little piffle you'll proba- bly already have forgotten it before you even exit the parking lot, director Steven Soderbergh's sec- ond sequel to his jaunty 2001 Rat Pack remake is the kind of movie you go see because the theater has air conditioning. Ditching the in-jokey, self- satisfied smugness that made 2004's Ocean's Twelve such a chore to sit through, this leaner, more busi- ness-like third installment sends George Clooney and Brad Pitt on a personal vendetta against Al Pacino's spray-tanned, Henna-haired casino boss. An absurd scenario to bankrupt the house is played out by the gargantuan supporting cast with Howard Hawks-ian professionalism and an em- phasis on cool. Soderbergh jazzes up the proceed- ings with a dazzling array of smash-cuts, time- shifts, split-screens and vibrant splashes of color, using his astonishing command of cinematic gram- mar to successfully distract us from the fact that there's really not much going on here at all. Clooney and Pitt cruise along in a sort of ludi- crously handsome second gear, with Matt Damon again doing most of the heavy lifting as their mis- fit protégé. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Ratatouille ★★½

It takes a certain amount of nerve to fashion a fan- tasy about a rodent in a kitchen, and so writer-direc- tor Brad Bird must be commended for his chutzpah in telling the animated tale of Remy (voiced by the great standup-comic Patton Oswalt), a rat with mis- guided dreams of someday becoming a gourmet chef. The film's central gimmick, which takes too long to set up and doesn't make much sense, has Remy hid- den beneath the hat of loose-limbed garbage boy Linguini (Lou Romano), where he can control the lad's movements by tugging away at random strands of hair. Ratatouille has all the visual razzle-dazzle we've come to expect from those mad geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios, with unbelievable atten- tion paid to every last bristle in Remy's fur, and sev- eral wide-screen Paris skylines more beautiful than actual photographs. And yet the material feels strangely one-dimensional, geared more towards the kids' table than to a universal audience. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rescue Dawn ★★★½

Christian Bale stars as Dieter Dengler, a cocky Navy pilot shot down during a secret bombing mission over Laos in 1965. He's captured and tor- tured for six months in a Vietcong prisoner-of-war camp before finally leading his fellow inmates on a bold, barefoot escape through the wilderness. So far, this sounds like the outline for any Chuck Norris Missing In Action sequel, but then nobody has ever filmed the jungle quite like director Werner Herzog. Ever since 1972's Aguirre, the Wrath of God, one of the greatest of all films, Her- zog has exhibited an awestruck respect for the un- stoppable, colossal indifference of Mother Nature. Herzog does not use his locations as mere back- drops; they're always complex, thriving organisms that conspire to destroy the puny humans who dare trespass upon them. Shot in Thailand, Rescue Dawn's unforgiving mudslides, waterfalls, wildlife and monsoons call to mind the filmmaker's own oft-mimicked one-liner from his 2005 documen- tary Grizzly Man: "I see no harmony in nature. Just chaos, destruction and murder." (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Simpsons Movie ★★½

A television institution, which even the most de- voted fan must admit is now well past its prime, Matt Groening's dysfunctional cartoon clan makes their big-screen debut in a feature that feels at least nine years late and a few jokes short. I don't suppose there's anything particularly wrong with The Simpsons Movie, save maybe the nagging sensation of familiarity, if not contempt, and a lit- tle bit of boredom. The trademark gags arrive densely packed during the film's first 20 minutes or so, but then thin considerably after an unwieldy plot turn sends the family scattering off to Alaska. Probably a matter of logistics, the sprawling sup- porting cast gets precious little screen-time, but the renewed focus on our main characters earns a couple of unexpected emotional dividends. Still, when all is said and done, The Simpsons Movie feels like watching two or three episodes back-to- back—hardly an unpleasant experience, but maybe not worth a trip to the theater. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Stardust ★★★

In his Sandman comics, as well as the terrific novel Good Omens, writer Neil Gaiman is at his best when he's grounding supernatural concepts in banal workaday realities. There's a droll, under- stated comedy to Gaiman's enchanted realms, and director Matthew Vaughn's adaptation of his Star- dust nails this tricky tone better than one probably had any right to expect. This fractured fairy tale stars Claire Danes as a star who has plummeted to Earth and possesses certain celestial properties sought by a rogue's gallery of villains and trick- sters—most notably Michelle Pfeiffer's vamping wicked witch. Charlie Cox is the bumbling swash- buckler who comes to our damsel's rescue, and these two bicker their way, screwball-style through an episodic collection of inventive set-pieces and throwaway gags. Danes is a bit awkward for her role, but the supporting cast runs away with the film, particularly a revitalized Robert De Niro as a fearsome pirate with a secret. Sometimes Stardust gets sloppy, but there's plenty of life and imagina- tion in the margins. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sunshine ★★½

There's maybe half a great movie to be found in di- rector Danny Boyle's somber, initially enthralling sci-fi head-trip. Set 50 years in the future, the movie follows a bickering band of astronauts dur- ing a treacherous attempt to jumpstart our falter- ing sun. Just as Boyle and screenwriter Alex Gar- land synthesized half a century's worth of cinematic zombie lore in their terrific 28 Days Later, Sunshine shoplifts hefty chunks from 2001, Solaris, Alien and even Mission to Mars. Meditative and methodical, the film's first hour is distin- guished by its chilly, adult tone and the con- trolled, striking compositions of cinematographer Alwin H. Kuchler. But there's a daring conceptual gambit by Boyle that doesn't quite come off: As the mission begins to fall apart, so goes the pic- ture's visual fabric. Thus, as the plausible malfunc- tions are replaced by an outlandish killer-in-the- house twist, Kuchler's sumptuously slow dolly shots go all herky-jerky handheld, the last reel spazzing completely out of control alongside the spaceship itself, until Sunshine finally collapses into a deliberately disorienting light-show. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Transformers NO STARS

Ladies and gentlemen, I present the Death of Cin- ema. An incompetent 144-minute commercial for Hasbro Toys, General Motor and whichever other corporate logos director Michael Bay can cram into the frame, this lobotomized tale of alien ro- bots doing battle on planet Earth can't be both- ered to make a lick of sense, as if antiquated con- cerns such as storytelling and spatial clarity might somehow impede upon the movie's main mission: selling stuff. Bay again proves to be our most insid- ious, least-talented living filmmaker as he pho- tographs his 30-feet automatons in such shaky, quick-cut close-ups that it's impossible to discern what the heck is happening or where anybody's even standing in relation to one another. All revved up with nowhere to go, the movie replaces innocent sci-fi wonder with the Armageddon director's usual hyper-aggressive, frat-boy bullying. There's no way giant robots can compete with the shrieking supporting cast of jaw-dropping racial stereotypes, or the camera's leering fixation on silicone-inflated extras. This movie is loud, ugly, stupid, boring and mean. Oh, and also worthless. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Line Dance

Pat Green straddles country and rock with precision and passion

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

There's a slim line between country singers who rock and rockers who sound country. Pat Green belongs to the former camp, though his music features crisp electric guitars and draws comparisons to Bruce Springsteen and John Mellencamp.

"You've got country music everywhere," says Green, who opened for Kenny Chesney at Gillette Stadium in July and returns to town to play Avalon Aug. 29. "I don't think it gets its due and a lot of people look down their nose at country music. But I'll tell you this: there's gonna be a lot more tickets sold at a Kenny Chesney tour this summer than any rock tour. We'll see over two million people."

As for today's slim line between country and rock, the Texas native says, "That's how it should be and always has been. If the king of rock 'n' roll, Elvis Presley, came out today, he would not have one record in the rock 'n' roll bin. The same goes for the Eagles. The Eagles right now would be considered a country band.

"The reason why I identified with guys like Mellencamp and Springsteen is because they had something to say," says Green, who grew up on classic rock as well as Texan country outlaws Jerry Jeff Walker and Willie Nelson, then spent 10 years in the cross-genre hotbed of Austin. "Most country music—and the best music in the world—has a story to tell. It's deeper than just a melody and a hook. It's more about, 'Hey look, we're into getting into people's souls a little bit.'"

Green is a pro at riding both sides of that line as well. Cannonball, his latest CD, streamlines melodies in slick production from Don Gehman, who oversaw Mellencamp's classic records in the '80s. "I try to make a record that's fluid," Green says. "The music has enough expression and depth to it that not every song sounds exactly the same." In turn, he stretched beyond party-themed fare such as the summer-styled anthem "Feels Just Like It Should" (which references cruising in an El Camino to Springsteen's "Born to Run") to snap more mature pictures of love's travails.

"It doesn't make any sense for me to write a song that isn't current," Green says from the road in Virginia. "Now I have a wife and kids. It's like, 'Wow, 35 years of my life. Here's where we're at right now.'"

The singer even let Gehman chose the musicians who played on Cannonball, apart from his drummer and songwriting partner Justin Pollard, who provided some percussion but mainly served as coproducer. "It was the first time I ever made a full record without anyone in my band playing, but I just wanted to see what it's like," Green says. "Life is experiential to me."

His first experience with the performer's world came via his father, a stockbroker and stage actor who appeared in musicals. "It was certainly exciting to see Dad get up there and do his thing," he says. "I guess that's what gave [the bug] to me in the first place, when I really started to watch Dad control a crowd." Not that Green, the eighth of 10 children, foresaw his own career at the time.

Pat Green has something to say in Cannonball.

"Nobody stands in front of a mirror with a tennis-racket pretend guitar and says, 'I'm gonna play for the coffeehouse.' They always say, 'I'm gonna play for the stadium.' Everybody dreams. But as far as making the decision that I'm going to do this for a career, it was something that just happened. I woke up one morning and figured out that I could make a living with this."

It's been a long road since Green began playing parties at Texas Tech and graduated to playing campuses throughout the South before signing his first record deal in 2001. "When we were a younger band, when we weren't dependent on the record labels, we depended on that kind of underground following from the college markets," says Green, who carved the same initial path in Boston, drawing fans from campuses close to the Paradise and now Avalon.

"Boston is one of those towns where if you get a good head of steam going for your band, you'll have it forever," says Green, who is popular enough back home to have sold out the Houston Astrodome as a headliner. "All we're trying to do is continue to build on a foundation that we've set there from touring."

And while Green admits that he's not as wild as Kenny Chesney onstage, he embraces the entertainer's role, to "get out there and make a spectacle of ourselves and make it look fun. When big songs come, you play the big places. And in those big places, you've got to fill 'em up by moving around. You just can't stand in one spot." IB

our brother was a businessman, philanthropist, friend, son, and above all a concerned citizen. He died June 2, 2003 of complications from Multiple Myeloma Cancer; he was 49.

One of the last gifts Michael left on this earth, was to help create, organize and name a charity bicycle ride where 100% of the money raised went to AIDS prevention, treatment and care. Although Michael never lived to see this dream a reality...It is!!!!!

Through Michael's vision; and countless concerned volunteers' efforts; THE HARBOR TO THE BAY AIDS CHARITY BIKE RIDE is now a reality.

Since it's inaugural ride in 2003 the RIDE has raised over $600,000.00 donated to Fenway Community Health Services, Aids Support Group of Cape Cod and Community Research Initiative.

The 68 or 125 mile (fully supported) one day bike ride starts in Boston and finishes in Provincetown...but the ride is only the beginning...the real finish line is Michael's, and all of humanities, dream/vision – a world without HIV/AIDS!

Until that time THE HARBOR TO THE BAY ride will continue to help raise funds that are earmarked 100% to help educate, treat and care for those affected by AIDS.

Thank you,
Mark Tye & Randy O'Brien

o were yapping away during pretty uch the entire performance of "The Dark Side of the Moon": I just wanted to say thank you so much. I think I speak for those in my vicinity that evening when I say we didn't appreciate paying upwards of $140 per ticket to put up with your nonsense. Here one of the classic musicians of all time is performing one of the most masterful albums of all time, yet you were yammering with wild abandon as if you were sitting in the bleachers at Fenway during some meaningless game. In the future, please have some consideration and get a clue.

Please Hide the Salami

To the "sandwich artist" at Revere Beach: First of all, my asking what ingredients you put in your "vegetarian" sandwich is definitely not worthy of a disgusted roll of your Barbie-blue–eyeshadowed eyes. Since you failed to find the answer, I made some suggestions. "Lettuce? Cheese? Tomatoes? Mayo/mustard?" Assuming we had come to some sort of sandwich agreement, I waited patiently for my order, which you handed to me with an evil smirk I decided to ignore. Since we were at the beach, I took my sandwich (awkwardly stuffed into a bag labeled "Delicious!") on the 10-minute walk back to the blanket. After swimming and volleyball and missing breakfast, I couldn't wait to unwrap my Delicious! $5 sandwich. I peeled open the end, and wait, was that a slice of pepperoni sticking out? Yes it was. Oh well, I thought, must have slipped in. I unwrapped the rest of the sandwich to find 12 more slices "slipped in" and a complete mockery of our sandwich agreement. No tomatoes. No mayo. No mustard. No condiments of any kind. And worst of all: no cheese. Just a few of those soggy outer leaves of lettuce and some peppers, along with a stray piece of tin foil, all wrapped up with the artistry of a seven year old. What is wrong with you anyway? Next time I'm walking the mile and a half to Blimpie's.

Cro-Magnon Kayakers

To the grown boys off the coast of Bank Street Beach a couple Saturdays ago: I know the draw of hanging onto the side of a kayak while floating in the open ocean and drinking multiple 30-packs of Corona with 20 of your guy friends—I've done it myself many a time. The only thing I have to ask is why, good Lord, why were you and your friends making those ridiculous "oooooooh, ooooooooh" noises? They were completely inappropriate and ridiculous, and you were making us unbelievably uncomfortable! Myself and my lovely MOTHER were just trying to enjoy a nice stroll on the beach when accosted by your symphony of young men in heat. Gross. I don't know what it was exactly. Maybe it's a testament to my beauty, maybe it's a testament to my mother's beauty—we're both quite exquisite specimens. Or maybe you and your friends weren't raised by women at all, but a bunch of society-shunning Sasquatches who worshipped Al Bundy and communicated in onomatopoeia. So thanks very much for your obnoxious ode to our whatever and for making us uncomfortable to boot.

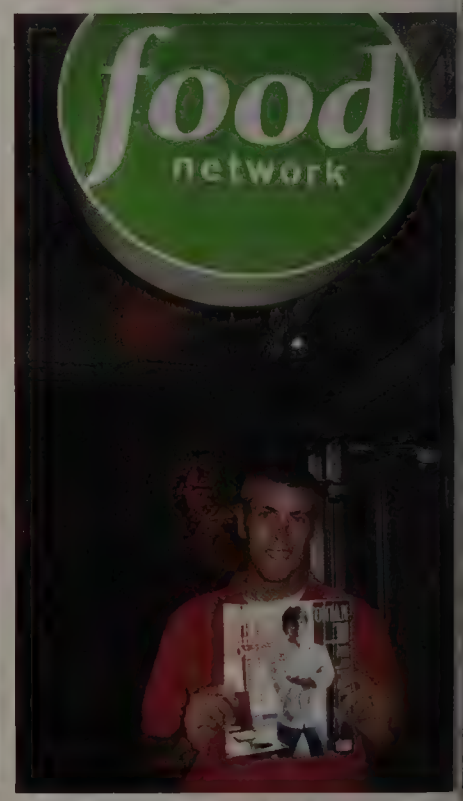
During a visit to Madrid, Joanne Choi posed with this clay sculpture, which we'd name Clay Aiken, if that weren't such a horrible, horrible joke.

Deborah McLucas and Shannon Cullen stayed at the Four Seasons in Lanai, Hawaii. Or as it should be called: Just One Sweaty Season.



Tufts Ph.D. student Ala Al Rajabi visited Palestine's Nativity Church. And on that note, we sometimes like to call Tufts, Tusks University. Not becau its mascot is an elephant, but simply because we like the word Tusks.

telling a Lion: "It's not about you." No King of the Jungle worthy of the name ıld believe it. And this week, no one else will either. Even if it's not your birthday, eyes are noticing how you look, all ears are eager to hear what you're doing at the ment and what your future plans might be. The only question we're too intimidated ısk is, "Who are you seeing?" If you inadvertently spill the beans, blame gossipy cury in your sign. Security-conscious Pluto will cover for your romantic inclinations l other risky behavior.

ittle birdie told me," can explain how you're receiving information you've acquired. While your Mercury ruler nsconced behind the scenes in the mysterious 12th se, it'll be difficult to identify your source. Not only ause of the secrecy imposed; however, when the sun and cury meet as they do on the 15th, you could turn into a nnel for cosmic forces, a bona fide Messenger of the s. Despite your Virgo expertise, try to keep an open d, especially about other people's emotional states.

BRA

PTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

the season to be jolly. Instead of December, August can he better month for party hopping. Although there's no nediate payoff, no Christmas bonus in sight, having your house of acquaintances and allies packed with planets gests that these people will become more important to r future success and happiness than they already are. ce your Venus ruler is retrograde through Labor Day, ıe of those smiling faces will remember the good old s, as well as your more wretched excesses.

might make more money in December, but this August can make significant strides in your career. The steps take needn't be strenuous, strategic or complicated. y could consist simply of being demonstrative and erous with people you don't often see, coming up with a tive idea or two and maintaining an upbeat attitude. the potency of the four planets currently transiting r sunny Leo midheaven and, before pragmatic Virgo uences set in, spread the good vibes you're projecting as e as you can.

AGITTARIUS

our physical body isn't cavorting far from home, send r mind there. Visit exotic resort sites online, bury your e in travel magazines and lavish picture books, rent e Lagoon. With four planets in your Leo house of ign travel and lifelong goals supporting your desire for gnificant change, now would be a good time to make attempt. Before a preoccupation with work takes over, ore you have to protect your reputation or fulfill igations to family and friends, take time out and tch out.

ing stock of what you have and what you haven't might be the highlight of your "How I Spent my Summer ation" report. Nonetheless, it'd be a good thing to do ore you become immersed in back-to-school business. So ch positive planetary energy is currently focused in your house of shared investment, insurance and inheritance tters, you'd be foolish (which you aren't) to let that rgy dissipate without putting it to use. Plus, there'll be of attention and affection surrounding your Saturn ruler.

QUARIUS

NUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

er you read for your sun sign, read for your rising sign. t's because there's so much planetary energy in fiery , you need to know where, other than in your marriage se, those passionate vibes are centered. Since you live and/or work with your partner, you're well aware what he or she is capable of creating when properly stoked. Then you can decide whether to join forces or to get out of the way of the firestorm. Once solar Virgo begins, things may quiet down, but not enough to stop the creative process.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

People in the service; those you do charity work with; health care workers; and employees of businesses you deal with on a daily basis—any one of them could be a conduit for the enormous amount of good will emanating from sunny Leo. If young children are involved, so much the better. While we're not keeping score per se, because your Neptune ruler is in Aquarius absorbing all this positive energy, some sort of karmic payback could be taking place. An extra benefit: Unbeknownst to you, your reputation is being repaired.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

It all depends on what you call "fun." You could knock yourself out training for an event so that you can achieve your personal best before the summer is out. You might grab a stack of books and stretch out on a chaise for the next few weeks or you could take advantage of the slew of planets bunching up in your Leo house of recreation, risk and romance, and pursue the latter with the kind of gusto the Ram is known for. Whatever you wind up doing, know that talented acquaintances are willing to help you attain your heart's desire. Let them.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Too much togetherness? Don't be surprised if a pride of Lions invades your turf and makes themselves at home. However, if you're not wining and dining or otherwise entertaining family and friends, you might find yourself knee-deep in decorating projects. No matter where your interest lies, you'll approach the activity with greater passion than you anticipate. A warning: Don't let all that pure, heart-felt emotion get displaced when it could be directed toward something you're very good at—giving and getting a whole lot of loving.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Unless you're desperate for some peace and quiet, an empty house is the last place you should be. Since you're likely to get your fill of family over the Labor Day holiday, you'd be better off spending quality time right now getting in touch with classmates and former neighbors, folks with whom you have history. There's a good chance that a casual conversation will take an amorous turn when your curious Mercury ruler merges with affectionate Venus mid-month, about the same time that the Messenger uncovers a mind-blowing secret.

CANCER

Each new moon poses a question the Moon Child is compelled to answer before the next new moon shifts your attention to another area of your life. Because the lunation on the 12th took place in your house of assets and values, over the next four weeks you're likely to become even more focused on money matters. Don't begrudge the time and effort needed to figure out the best course of action. With Mercury, Saturn, Venus and, until the 23rd, the sun all in creative Leo, your solution is likely to be fairly painless and, more important, long lasting.

YO, DOWN IN FRONT!

On Opening Night at Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home in Lenox), you never know whether you're going to need sunglasses… or an umbrella. This year, it was both, not only because of the positively Wagnerian weather, which wavered between blinding sunshine and torrential thunderstorms, but because of the major celebrity wattage, which made wearing sunglasses seem appropriate. After all, it's not every party where you turn around during dinner to see a legendary rock star taking a picture of the governor's wife with one of the biggest actors in Hollywood.

The evening began with drinks and dinner in a big white tent and continued with a concert in the Koussevitzky Music Shed, and perhaps because the Berkshires are a bit more Manhattan than Boston, the glamour quotient was unusually high, with a bold-faced contingent that included such giants of the classical music world as conductor André Previn and cellist Yo Yo Ma (with his wife, Jill, and daughter, Emily), high-society bandleader Peter Duchin and his wife, Hollywood royalty Brooke Hayward, governor Deval Patrick and the perfectly lovely Diane, and broadcasting behemoth Ron della Chiesa with the delectable Joyce. Then there was the BSO's beautiful blonde Kim Smedvig, whose husband, James Taylor, arrived a bit later with their houseguests for the weekend: John Travolta and Kelly Preston (hence the aforementioned photo-op).

With the arrival of each new big name, the cocktail chatter slowly transformed from sarcastic comments about the advanced age of the guests—one joked, "Is this a gerontology conference?" while another said, "I found a fossil last week," to which someone else responded, "Well, look around. There are plenty here."—to the salient observation: "You know it's a glam party when you can't figure out who the bodyguards are for."

As board chair Ed Linde put it (making a pun out of the evening's musical program), "This is a midsummer night's dream come true."

Also present and accounted for: catering cutie Dan Mathieu and his absurdly handsome husband, Tom Potter, über-philanthropists Ed and Carole Rudman, swanlike socialite Sandy Krakoff, New York venture capitalist Rob Grien with brunette bombshell Jan Healey, Cowan and Co. head honcho Joe Cohen, snappy dresser Simon Shaw and state rep Smitty Pignatelli (who deserves some sort of award for having such a fun name).

After dinner, everyone hustled over to the concert, where those in the know witnessed a hilarious scene. After playing the overture to Mendelsohn's Midsummer Night's Dream, maestro James Levine paused to let Smedvig, Taylor, Travolta and Preston take their seats under the cover of dimmed houselights, which prompted some grumbling in the audience as a few hundred other people took the opportunity to scurry in. Then, just as Levine was about to raise his baton, a hunched-over figure scampered down the aisle to hissing and groaning from the now-deeply-annoyed crowd, who didn't realize that it was Yo Yo Ma taking his seat. We're assuming it was the first and only time he's ever been booed at Tanglewood.

SACRE BLEU!

Only the French could turn a date when a bunch of rabble-rousing riff-raff attacked a prison and set the inmates free into a national cause for celebration, but we're glad they did, because the French Library and Cultural Center's annual Bastille Day block party on Marlborough Street is one of our favorite fêtes of the summer.

The event began with a VIP reception in the ballroom of the library, where the champagne flowed freely, all the better to wash down little caviar blinis and fuel the cocktail party chit-chat among guests like trustee Elaine Rosenfeld and her husband, Playbill owner Jerome, Brookline eminence grise Vernon Alden, trustee Brad Curley and his wife, Tracy (sporting a dazzling diamond necklace from Cartier), fashion avatar Tina Sutton and her husband, PBS personality John Carroll, the perfectly charming Christine Kennedy and her other half, James, and French consul general to Boston François Gauthier, who explained that his wife's name was François, adding, "The 'e' makes you a lady."

"Funny," said someone sarcastically, "I always thought it was a Y chromosome."

Among the other witty comments overheard: One guest asked another, "Do you speak French?" to which the person responded, "Only after four or five glasses of wine," but truth be told, many of the conversations were held en française, so a good bit was lost on us.

A picnic supper was held in the gorgeously decorated garden before guests scattered out to the block party, where the theme of Liberté, Egalité et Fraternité was realized with a lineup of musical acts from all over the French-speaking world, from Haiti to the Côte d'Ivoire.

In fact, executive director Elaine U. Leary emphasized that this was a Francophone celebration as opposed to a strictly French one, but proving that, beneath it all, the evening was truly Gallic, the block party was punctuated by clouds of cigarette smoke, prompting one guest to say, "It's just like Paris, minus all the dog poop." iB

AUTOMOTIVE GROUP

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a time when the World Wide Web offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every ay. So, Brian Kelly, President of the Kelly Automotive Group has roduced a series of videos that nswer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

ere are four such videos...

Lease Or Buy
Best Way To Finance
How To Read A Car Ad
How To Choose A Dealer

At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not. "I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation."

At present, two of the videos are set at kellyauto.com for your review. The other two will be there sometime in July.

FALLING INTO PLACE

As the nights cool down and days grow shorter, it's time to think about your fall wardrobe. Before you shop, consult our Fall Fashion Preview, filled with designer looks to guide your choices.

In his men's and women's spreads, fashion editor Victor Vargas breaks down the trends, with the big news for both sexes being minimalism (good-bye puffs and frills, hello simplicity) and updated classics (timeless styles with unexpected color and details). Gorgeous photos show you how to put it all together, whether you go couture or find your own knockoffs. (If the latter, also see "Knock It Off" for runway looks duplicated on a budget.)

In other fashion news, Seattle-based Nordstrom has finally come to town, taking up residence at the newly revamped/renamed Natick Collection. Their creative director tells us what treasure we'll find there.

JUST FOR KICKS

I understand that soccer may not, at this time, be the most popular sport in America. But THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's lack of respect for some of the most gifted athletes in America is embarrassing. To my understanding, the IMPROPER is a magazine created to showcase and support all things Boston and its surrounding cities. Yet with nearly every IMPROPER I open, the Revolution's success is either ignored or put down. In the real estate issue (Aug. 1), Rich Levine discusses four dates to watch concerning forthcoming local events and includes a backhanded soccer slight—something I've come to expect from the IMPROPER.

Major League Soccer is in its 11th year, average attendance is up again this year, and soccer is the most widely participated-in youth sport. The ignorance of one Boston magazine won't ever change that.

—JOSEPH F. CUMMINGS IV
Medford

MORE THAN A HARE OFF

In his review of Sage (Aug. 1), J. Charles Mokriski deems the saffron risotto accompanying the rabbit milanese "exotic," as if saffron in anything called "milanese" would be surprising. From the Oxford Encyclopedia of Food: "Saffron… is used to flavour and colour many, but not all, rice dishes (for example, Paella) in Spain, and it is an essential ingredient of Milanese risotto." Risotto recipes containing saffron are also found in the first Italian-language cookbook.

While Mr. Mokriski's appreciation of good food is clear, his apparent lack of understanding of the classic dishes makes one wonder if he knows how they ought to taste, casting suspicion on his determinations that a given dish is well-prepared.

NEW IN TOWN

Year of the Chinese Restaurant

By the time I get to the loft Christopher Myers and Joanne Chang share near Chinatown, the Ikea lampshade has a slight tan tinge. Myers lifts it from a bucket of tea. If the stain takes, it might wind up in their new restaurant, Myers + Chang, which opens this September in the South End. For the moment, he leaves it to soak in the corner while he fixes some iced coffee.

This is how an eatery comes together. A pile of books—Essentials of Asian Cuisine, Hot Sour Salty Sweet, Chinese Kitchen—stands at the ready for recipe testing by Chang and chef Alison Hearn (of Craigie Street Bistrot). Employees work at the dining table as a potential playlist booms in the background. Moving into the living area, it feels more workshop than apartment.

Chang emerges from the bedroom, easing herself onto an ottoman. Myers looks up from the shaggy white carpet where he lounges, talking excitedly about the project. He turns the rock music down a little. Hair pulled back and the picture of perfect posture, Chang looks like she could have just come from a yoga class.

These two have a yin and yang thing going on. Now engaged, they met at Rialto, where Chang served as pastry chef and Myers as a co-owner. A random trip to China laid the groundwork for a friendship and, later, more. With plenty of combined experience—Chang has Flour Bakery + Café; Myers has Great Bay, Radius and Via Matta with partners Esti Parsons and Michael Schlow—it seemed time for a joint venture.

Chinese was an obvious choice. It's what Chang grew up eating and—how's this for good fortune—Myers' favorite cuisine. The American spin on it, however, hasn't done much to win converts. "You get sick of people saying there's no good place to have Chinese food," Myers explains. He readily offers several spots in Chinatown worth exploring, including Taiwan Café and Best Barbecue. But, they realize, not all diners are as adventurous as themselves.

Enter Myers + Chang. She points to the neighborhood's B&G Oysters and the Franklin Café as what they're after—"places people love to go to. Why can't we do this type of restaurant, Chinese-style?" she asks.

They're about to try, with an affordable menu (prices run about $7–$19) of small and large plates. This isn't entirely authentic Chinese food, but their interpretation of it, with various Asian influences. Traditional options include pork dumplings (her mom's recipe), fried rice, and hot and sour soup. Yellow chive pancakes with Chinese sausage, and a soy-braised, shitake-mushroom clay pot with tofu, pea greens and a soft-poached egg take an inventive approach.

The creative theme continues in the 1,800-square-foot space designed by architect David Hacin. With only 55 seats, it has a Chinese-diner vibe expressed in wood counters, bubblegum-pink stools and a serious sound system. Chang's dad is coming to town to do calligraphy on the walls.

Myers, who's been talking on the phone, interrupts to ask Chang for the credit card number and whether the take-out boxes should come in just one size. They're supposed to be biodegradable, she remarks. All the little details add up. Myers + Chang, 1145 Washington St., Boston (617-542-5200). www.myersandchang.com.

INNER VIEW

It's OK, I Asked

Boston-based author and humorist Steve Almond has two new babies: his daughter and his fifth book, Not That You Asked, a collection of essays on everything from sexual failure to first-time fatherhood. We recently caught up with Almond, who appears Sept. 6 at Porter Square Books and Sept. 13 at Brookline Booksmith. "It goes over great, reading on a major religious holiday in Brookline," he deadpans. "Great planning by Steve Almond."

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: You've written a novel, a nonfiction book and essay collections. Does one come easier than the others?

Steve Almond: I started as a short-story writer. They're my first love. They're the drama queens of literature. You're trying to break the reader's heart, and I don't mean in a cheesy, Hollywood way, but there's a lot of pain there. Then with nonfiction you can't make shit up. The nice thing about life is if you're observing it carefully, and if you're honest about how it feels, you know that we're consistently getting our hearts broken and getting hard-ons and grieving the ways we f--- up and disappoint the people around us.

IB: They say that comedy comes from pain.

SA: I think that when things are funny, it's a combination. This is why I love Vonnegut. He was my first literary hero and it was because he was simultaneously writing about things that were incredibly sad, but he did so in a way that was hysterically funny, and I really think that comedy or humor is our best cloak for grief or the best way to experience that heavy sadness.

IB: Does your writing take a bit of bravery? You write about some embarrassing subjects.

SA: People say that, but I don't feel that it's so brave. I feel everyone's walking around in a constant state of humiliation. I'm just not bullshitting about it. And the thing is, the act of confession is a kind of self-forgiveness.

IB: How has the new baby changed your writing life?

SA: A new baby is like Glenn Close in Fatal Attraction. A new baby will not be ignored. You just have to get that for a while, that you and your creative life aren't priority one. I think my wife struggles more than I do with that, but we both need to find more time and ways to be more efficient. Are we? F---. No. —Nick Altschuller

TASTY TIDBITS

We Heart Nelly and Anna

Get Down and Dirty… For what it was—a tiny dive bar with a limited menu, tucked behind the craziness that's Faneuil Hall—we loved Pete's Pub and were sad to see it go earlier this summer. But in late July, the spot re-opened and, nostalgia aside, reminded us that sometimes change is good. The renovated joint, called Durty Nelly's, boasts a 20-seat bar, decorated to the Irish gills (check out the Old Country golf clubs), and four flat-screen TVs. Plus—and this is the best upgrade—a lunch menu with grub including a BLT, grilled cheese, soups and the Durty Nelly's Burger. Given that, we're more than willing to overlook the less than appetizing name. 108 Blackstone St., Boston (617-778-8032).

Durty Nelly's

Anna's taco

A Boston Anna Begins… Anna's Taqueria gets a lot of love in this town, so it's hard to believe they've yet to open a Boston location… until now. We've gotten word that late this fall, owner Michael Kamio will do just that. The Beacon Hill eatery—no. 6, if you're counting—will take over a 2,600-square-foot duplex on the corner of Cambridge and Garden streets. It'll seat up to 40 diners and serve the same ultra-affordable Mexican faves that have earned Anna's our Boston's Best Burrito award every year since about 1860. Now if we could just get them to open one right next to the IMPROPER's offices…

Eco-Zone… When we first heard about the Grille Zone, it immediately conjured up images of an environmentalist's paradise: an eatery with food so fresh there'd be no need for a freezer and a business plan so green they wouldn't own a dumpster. OK, so actually we envisioned a hole in the wall with a couple of skillets and a fryolator. Boy, were we wrong. The Grille Zone, which opened at 1022 Comm. Ave. in late June, is an Al Gore wet dream, with the above eco-measures plus a menu consisting almost entirely of local products and some of the better burgers (seriously, we tried one), dog and grilled cheeses in the city. 1022 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-566-9663). www.grillezone.com.

Now Open… Often in this space we give you the heads up on a restaurant that's opening pretty far down the road—so far, in fact, that we fear our report could be a distant memory once it actually opens. So here's a quick run down of once-announced, now-in-business eateries in the Boston-area: Gaslight and Greenlight, 560 Harrison Ave Boston (617-422-0224); Samurai Boston, 827 Boylston St Boston (617-236-7672); Mooo, 15 Beacon St., Boston (617 670-2515). —Rich Levine

Summer days of drinking G&Ts at the club have come to a close, and you're headed home to the H (Beacon, not Capitol—yet). As exploits on sandy shores give way to the hum of fluorescent ligh you resign yourself to a season of somber clothes and kiss your Nantucket reds good-bye. Not fast. While you were lazing about, Alice Blum (former Bierly-Drake design assistant) stocked her ne Charles Street shop, North River Outfitter, with all the accoutrements of a well-lived life. That high-quality, timeless garments to be worn year-round, in the city, the country or on the shore. T store, which is decked out in dark wood and nautical flags, concentrates on must-haves for men, w some cute pieces for women thrown into the mix. There are navy blazers in worsted wool, co plete with gold-tone buttons, waxed and waterproof Barbour jackets, Atlantis windbreakers, B Khakis khakis and cords, hand-sewn deck shoes by Dubarry, and Thatcher Spring ties. Take That, Back Bay… The big buzz in retail this fall is the Natick Mall's transformation into the Natick Collection, with a 550,000-square-foot expansion and renovation housing a slew of new stores. The first Nordstrom in the Bay State and a new Neiman Marcus anchor the new wing, which gets unveiled to the masses Sept. 7, with events, including fashion shows, raffles and cocktail parties. Featuring 270 luxury stores and restaurants, the new wing has such big-name retailers as Anthropologie, Gucci, Kate Spade, Ralph Lauren and several Massachusetts newcomers, including Hannah Anderson, Martin + Osa, and überpopular Zara. ction has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

RING IT UP

I don't see no wedding band on this fing—d'oh!

I'm not a jewelry guy. I don't wear chains or earrings. My watch is a Fossil, which is appropriate because it sees the light of day about as often as a brontosaurus femur lodged in sediment from the Cretaceous period. And I hardly ever wear my nipple studs anymore. At this point, they're little more than a reminder that the Fetish Fair is best visited sober.

My sole piece of jewelry is my wedding band. For about the first six months I had it, I was constantly aware of the hunk of metal riding around on my left hand. I fiddled with it constantly. I looked as comfortable as a dog wearing sunglasses, but less hilarious. I asked my married buddy Joe how long it takes to get used to wearing a ring, and he said, "Oh, you'll get used to it just about… never."

That's why I was surprised when one of my wife's coworkers told me that he bought a cheapo wedding band, then bought five backups because he knew he'd lose it. "You take it off to play golf, or you go swimming and you lose them. Guys are inherently too idiotic to take care of a wedding ring," he said. No way, I thought. How could you lose something that you're dimly conscious of at all times? It'd be like Jared from Subway losing his appetite for healthy turkey subs, or his virginity.

Besides, my ring was tight, literally. It was mostly tungsten carbide, a metal commonly used for drill bits. The jewelry salesman told me that tungsten carbide is so hard, it can't even be cut off if you have some sort of finger-smashing accident. Bad-ass, in other words. That news actually made me a little worried at the time, until the salesman assured me that if I dropped an anvil on my finger, they'd just inject it with anti-swelling agents to get the ring off. With the specter of the nickname "Nine-Digit Dyer" out of the picture, there was no way I was going with a simple white gold number. I was wedding-ring pimp mack daddy E, rockin' the tungsten-and-inset-platinum like my finger was a blinged-out drill bit. Holla.

Well, I think you can guess where this is going, based on my use of the past tense to describe my wedding band. The first two times I went swimming with my ring, I was so paranoid about losing it that I swam with a clenched left fist, like I was punching imaginary sharks in the face, which, incidentally, I was. But a few weeks ago, I spent some time frolicking in the water off Block Island, blissfully unaware that at some point in my swim, the primary memento of my wedding day slid off into th Atlantic.

I walked back up to the beach and re flexively reached to adjust my ring, only t get that sick feeling that settles into th pit of your stomach when you realiz you're completely, irredeemably screwe In terms of sentimental value, you can put a price on your original wedding ban However, in sheer monetary terms, it quite easy to quantify: I just tied $900 to rock and skipped it into the deep blue se I never realized how many things yo could buy with $900 until I gazed down my naked ring finger, at which point m mind couldn't stop coming up with sugge tions: airfare to Europe, six months' cond fees, Patriots playoff tickets, 90 pizzas, appearance by Corey Haim. Or, you kno

I LOOKED A COMFORTABLE WEARING MY RING AS A DOG WEARING SUNGLASSES, BUT LESS HILARIOUS

I could just throw it in the ocean. That another option.

With the weakest of hope, I bought children's swim mask (the only size avai able) and snorkeled around for a half-ho peering into the swirling sand off Ballan beach. I felt about as stupid as the guy I s on Family Feud the other day who yell "Amsterdam!" while going for the steal "Countries that begin with the letter 'A.

Now I had to make The Phone Ca Heather, back in Boston, tried to downpl the loss of the Precious as much as s could. She told me it was replaceable a we'd get another ring. I tried to regro and have some typical Block Island fu but this year I was just going through t motions of getting drunk and sunburn My heart wasn't in it, at least not to the e tent that my liver and epidermis were.

As I sit here now, my replacement ri awaits at the cheesy mall jewelry sto This one is tungsten carbide, too, but stead of contrasting inset platinum, I thi it uses a less expensive material, like sh lacked cat fur. It's quite handsome handsome, I really ought to buy two.

THE COLLINS CARD

ARMED FOR OCTOBER

Postseason success for the Red Sox starts on the mound, not at the plate

I plead guilty. I grew up worshipping at the altar of hitting and home runs. After all, chicks love the long ball, and the Red Sox taught me that hitting can be very fun to watch. The three-run homer was art. And 7-6 ballgames were a joy, especially when the Red Sox won.

But times have changed and so have I—again with the Red Sox' help. As panic once again fell upon Red Sox Nation like the Blizzard of '78, the only thing I could see with clarity was how the lessons learned in 2004 are proving to be vital in 2007. Sorry, Yankee fans, but the Red Sox have you beat.

I'm talking about pitching—the foundation of the 2007 Red Sox.

The chasm that exists between the Sox and Yanks reminds me of golf and that old adage: Drive for show, putt for dough. Baseball's version would be: Hit for show, pitch for championship dough.

As for the Yankees, who deserve a lot of credit for their turnaround this summer, they've lost the formula for success they made famous. Sure, they can hit with the best of them, maybe of all time. Guys like Bobby Abreu, Melky Cabrera and Robinson Cano have killed the ball, with the Yanks scoring more runs in a night than the Sox were putting up in a week. But don't be fooled. There are questions about the Yankees' staff, particularly their starters.

Our Sox, on the other hand, have revamped their blueprint for success. In fact, we must credit Lou Gorman and Dan Duquette for starting this routine of acquiring a great pitcher to lead the way.

It was Roger Clemens for a decade beginning in 1985, and then Pedro Martinez about a dozen years later. Great pitchers stop losing streaks and give you a chance at a championship.

So I consider this current team and realize the importance of pitching, even more than I did with Clemens and Martinez before them.

Look at this staff. All five starters are entering September, the key month for the Sox, at the top of their games. Josh Beckett is becoming the Clemens of this era (he's not quite there yet). Dice-K is knocking on that same door, but he's still a year away from being the pitcher many of us think he will become. And Curt Schilling is, well, Curt Schilling, which means you can count on him from here on out. He would never disappoint us on a national stage—his ego wouldn't allow it.

And it's not just their stuff; it's their makeup and their experience with pitching when the game is on the line.

This staff is deep, too. After the to three, you've got Tim Wakefield and Jo Lester, who've proven to be as good as an four-five tandem in the majors.

Theo Epstein has embraced what Gorma and Duquette started, elevating the plan to new stratosphere. He isn't signing or draftin guys who might, down the road, make nic end-of-the-rotation players or maybe fill i the bullpen. He's acquiring pitchers wh have the stuff to become aces and the men tal makeup to win championships.

It's a pretty good setup when you hav the 23-year-old Lester already pitchin meaningful innings despite a major setbac with cancer. There's also Clay Buchhol who might be even better than Lester an is ready to jump into the first available spo in the Boston rotation. (Schilling is with out a contract for next season.)

It almost seems unfair the way Epstein h loaded this franchise with pitching, not on now but for the foreseeable future. Whi brings me back to the fact that this team, d spite a $143 million payroll, is offensiv challenged. So much so that for the seco straight year they don't have a No. 5 hit to protect Manny Ramirez. Seventy milli dollars doesn't go as far as it used to— Drew has been a disaster.

But you know what? The Red Sox ha not only survived but thrived this sumr because of the pitching. Heck, I'm s waiting for David Ortiz to have his f "big" hit of 2007, but realistically he's t surgeries away from returning to the r Big Papi.

I have to admit, it's frustrating watch this team not hit in the clutch. But does abundance of offensive frustration re mean anything when a World Series i the near future? It could be this yea could be next, but it's coming.

It's all about pitching. We seem quic forget that in the annual Yankees pa that consumes all of us late in the sea but dammit, it's that simple. IB

WELCOME TO THE IMPROPER SCHOOL OF SPORTS

5 Questions For Paul Pierce

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Tell us about the Paul Pierce Basketball Camp here at Basketball City.

PAUL PIERCE: It's a great environment for the kids to come out to in the summertime. I hadn't run a camp in Boston for, like, five years, so I thought it was time for me to come give some advice to the kids and try to help them out.

IB: How excited are you for the fall, knowing that the Garden's going to be sold out every night? Is it even a reality yet?

PP: It won't be a reality till we're all out there together for the first time. It's just anticipation right now, and I can't wait to get out there with the guys.

IB: Have you spoken to Al or any of the other young players since the trade?

PP: I haven't yet, but even before the trade, when the rumors were going around, I always told them that this league is a business and that all you can worry about is establishing yourself as an NBA player. Ever since I've been in the league, I've been rumored for a trade! You've just got to have thick skin.

IB: Three seconds left in a tie game: Who's taking the last shot? Got to be you, right?

PP: [Laughs.] It's gonna be who's hot. You know Kevin's done great things for his team down the stretch, Ray's done it, and so have I. It'll be by committee. We'll see whoever's got it going that night.

IB: Your 30th birthday's coming up in a few months. Anything big you hope to accomplish before kissing your 20s good-bye?

PP: I don't know, but I'll probably throw a big party, man. This is monumental for me.

IB: Great, I'll leave my address with you for when the invites go out.

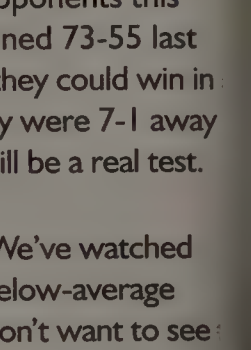
4 Part Pats' Preview

1 Their eight road opponents this year were a combined 73-55 last season. The Pats showed they could win in enemy territory in '06 (they were 7-1 away from the Razor), but '07 will be a real test.

2 Randy and Donté: We've watched Brady thrive with below-average receivers before, but we don't want to see it again. So, please heed the words of Family Guy's Herbert and stretch out those creamy hamstrings. Enough is enough.

3 Second-year linebacker Pierre Woods is the new Tully Banta-Cain. What exactly does that mean? We're not sure, but we liked Tully a lot.

4 Lastly, a prediction: 12-4. The boys head over to Indianapolis again for the AFC Championship, take another big lead, but hold on this time. Then it's whipping season in Arizona against whatever mess comes out of the NFC (probably the Saints, which should make the rest of the country hate the Pats even more). Sure, we're slightly biased, but chew on this stat: The Pats have never lost a Super Bowl in a year when Tom Brady enters fatherhood.



3 Dates To Watch

1 AUG. 31: Tiger Woods celebrates Labor Day by beating the ever-living hell out of the competition at the annual Deutsche Bank Championship, held at the TPC Boston in Norton.

2 SEPT. 1: The month starts with 12 straight games for the Sox—six against Baltimore, and three apiece with Toronto and Tampa. Boys, let's wrap it up here and you can have the rest of the month to screw around on eBay, OK?

3 SEPT. 9: Hands down, the best day of the year. That's right… it's Hugh Grant's birthday! No, but seriously, NFL Week 1: Pats at Jets. We couldn't be more excited (but not so much that we'd get arrested for public sex with a prostitute, you know, like a certain birthday boy).

2 Words For Bridget

GO EASY!

Bridg: We know that this isn't an ideal situation. Tom won't be there as much you'd like him to be these next couple of months, and truthfully, we doubt he'll get there as much as he'd like to either. You have every right to break his balls over this, but please, not so much that it puts this season in jeopardy. We don't know Tom personally, but from all we've heard, he's quite possibly the most perfect human being who's ever lived. We have complete faith he'll be a great father, and so should you.

1 Pitch We Want No Part Of...

The slutter: Jonathan Papelbon's new cut fastball/slider combo he famously used to strike out Johnny Gomes to end the game on Aug. 21. Has there ever been a more intimidating pitch? If you get hit by a slutter, should you immediately shower and/or get a tetanus shot? These are questions that need to be answered. But for now, we'll take comfort in knowing the slutter's on our side.

SIDEWALK SAM

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Sidewalk Sam, who's been re-creating artistic masterpieces on Boston walkways for more than 40 years, was born Robert Guillemin in Cambridge, the son of a Harvard professor. He studied at Boston College with the intent of becoming a Jesuit priest, but his love of art won out, and he earned both bachelor's and master's degrees in painting from Boston University. He's been called "the Johnny Appleseed of Art" and a "pavement Picasso," and has been featured on Today, Good Morning America, Evening Magazine and Real People, as well as in countless newspaper and magazine articles. Now in a wheelchair due to a spinal cord injury, he organizes large events to make the creation and enjoyment of art a communal experience and to address social problems like violence, poverty and environmental loss. He lives with his wife and family in Newton.

Jonathan Soroff: So why the sidewalk?
Sidewalk Sam: Well, after my one-man show at the ICA, I really felt out of place. I went to this august institution, and on these precious white walls I displayed my artwork, and the surface on which it appeared said astonishingly high-class things about my art. I didn't think that I had a right to usurp this privilege and not be out there with mankind, with grape pickers, with union factory workers, the salt of the earth, who had no special presentation for their thoughts. I wandered around the city feeling kind of crippled…

JS: And this was before you were in a wheelchair?
SS: [Laughs.] That's right. So it was a reaction against all that.

JS: Why reproductions instead of original works?
SS: I think artists should be humble, maybe more humble than they are. The cliché is that they dare to create a vision of the future, they dare to be different, and I think that it's a much humbler role that they have. Their job is to record the good that is humanity. In the old days, the bible illuminators, I liked their humility, and I wanted to emulate that by being a copyist. I wanted to bring the great masterpieces to the people by putting them on the sidewalk. I wanted to take the "Mona Lisa" out of the Louvre and lay her down on the pavement and have her look up at us for a change. It's a fitting and proper thing for art to do.

JS: Where does your inspiration come from?
SS: Well, first by rules of common decency that I learned at my mother's knee. The idea of service and obedience and of art fulfilling a duty to the meek and humble of heart. I remember the first time I did artwork on the ground. I got up after 10 or 14 hours, with my back and knees sore, and I felt like a ditch-digger. There was something more honest in being associated with a laborer than with the intelligentsia, and I loved it.

JS: What did the people in the art world establishment say?
SS: I did a lot more of them, until my gallery said, "Um, listen, we can't represent you if you're giving your art away, or if it disappears in a day and people can walk on it. How can we represent you as distinguished?" And it was the only creative thing I've done in my life. I said, "Well, I think I'll stick with doing the art on the sidewalk." And in those days, that was a daring thing to do.

> "I WANTED TO BRING THE GREAT MASTERPIECES TO THE PEOPLE BY PUTTING THEM ON THE SIDEWALK."

JS: So how to explain the enduring icons, like the "Mona Lisa" or any of the other works that have lasted centuries and are behind bullet-proof glass, guarded by elaborate security systems?
SS: I love the Louvre, and if either me or it had to go, I'd gladly step aside. God bless it, may it last a thousand years, and the same of all the other great works in great museums. But what I'm trying to do is say, "Hallelujah!" I want to say this has something to do with our daily lives and reflects on our dignity and our sense of selves. It should be part of shopping or going to lunch.

JS: How do you choose the subjects?
SS: It's dictated by circumstance. One time I heard that Mayor Menino was worried about the Aquarium, so I began to do artwork to promote the Aquarium. It did it well, and they asked me to continue. I've done things to promote the Franklin Park Zoo. Themes that celebrate the spirit of Boston are what I love to create on the sidewalk.

JS: I take it there's not a lot of money in what you do.
SS: [Laughs.] No. I do it because I believe in it. I've created thousands of artworks for free, but now there are different people who subsidize it. One day, a fellow crouched down next to me and said, "I'm John Kerry, your senator." I loved his casual humanity, and we really hit it off. He put me in touch with lawyers, and they helped me create our nonprofit, Art Street [www.artstreet.org], which is a group of artists that think like I do.

JS: Don't you ever look at something you've done and say, "I wish that one would last."
SS: You have to get into a certain place, and I've gotten there and I'm relaxed with it. I remember one time, in front of City Hall, I did a Titian of a man with a silky beard and a fur collar and a gloved hand on the hilt of an ornate silver sword. I was proud of it, but just as I finished it, it began to rain. People gathered and said, "Oh, no!" And I said, "Look at how beautiful it is, these little rivers of emerald and gold." We just enjoyed the dissipation of the artwork and marveled at the way that nature took it over. I love the fact that my work doesn't last.

JS: How did you end up in a wheelchair?
SS: Oh, a silly little thing. One winter, an ice dam formed on the roof of my house, and I said, "I'll fix that," so I put a ladder up and got the ice dam fixed, but the sun set, and the roof completely froze and there was a coating of ice. I thought, "I bet if I skied down the roof, I'd develop enough speed to leap and grab a branch of a tree." So I tried it, and I didn't make the branch. When I hit the ground, I was conscious. I couldn't move my legs, but I thought, "Hallelujah! Life is still with me." I've never felt sorry about it. I could never make love again, or ski, or do lots of things I enjoyed, but the only thing that can truly cripple you is your mind.

JS: So the first time you tried to paint after that?
SS: I went to my studio, and I wanted to paint a horizontal line in red. My body collapsed, and the horizontal became vertical, and I thought, "My painting is going to be changed." I can't do sidewalk art the way I used to. I'm a little more restricted. I did another 50 or so by myself, and then other artists said, "I can help you block it out." People help me with 90 percent of the art. I'd love it if people who read this and are good artists and want to serve mankind would join me in bringing art to the sidewalk.

JS: Favorite place to paint?
SS: Well, one that's dear to my heart is City Hall Plaza because it's the archetypal surface. I created artworks of 20,000 square feet that several thousand artists have worked on. But otherwise, I like average little corners of the city. I love crouching down early in the morning, sweeping aside the cigarette butts and beginning to treat this site like a spiritual place.

JS: Favorite painter?
SS: Van Gogh. He was of the people. He did not paint because he believed in the academy. He did art because he believed in the little people. I love Van Gogh more than I love most artists.

JS: Ever had someone ruin a painting while you were working on it?
SS: No, and therein lies a moral. If you preach to people, saying you have the truth and you foist it upon them, they object. If you put people first, and care to be a handmaiden to others, like Mary Magdalene, you will win them over. To do humble things that serve humanity is the best thing you can do, and people will love you for doing it.

JS: Ever witness someone dissing your work?
SS: No. But dogs are my harshest critics.

JS: So many artists seem to be striving for immortality through their art. How do you want to be remembered?
SS: I think both you and I would say, "Some things are important. Some things aren't." And I think it's more important that the human race keep going than you or I. So I would love to have served the human race rather than have the human race remember me. IB

UPDATED CLASSICS AND MINIMALIST LOOKS GAIN GROUND THIS FALL

THE FASHION COMPASS HAS SET A NEW COURSE ONCE AGAIN—AND IT HAS BOSTON WRITTEN ALL OVER IT.

The most exciting trends for fall '07 reflect precision tailoring, sophisticated confidence and an updated approach to standing out. That translates to the return of minimalism, high-tech fabrics and revised classics like the winter coat. Highlights from the runways include bold colors, metallic finishes and a body-conscious silhouette rooted in 1980s decadence and '40s Dior.

The "lady-chic" faithful will love the timeless looks with modern twists that permeated the shows in New York, Paris and Milan: To-the-elbow gloves with oversize zippers, platform Mary Janes and oxfords, and short-sleeve coats were "le dernier cri" on the catwalk. Some of the coats point to Paul Poiret, that master of '20s style whose ongoing exhibition at the Met has clearly made an impression. Speaking of outer layers, there's big news in fur, which should make surviving that first Nor'easter a little easier. This isn't your grandmother's mink, however. You'll find marabou feathers and shaggy knits that mimic fur in both volume and texture. To really keep warm, also invest in a must-have coat in long goat hair or Mongolian lamb. Such exotic pieces may have you rushing to jump the next shuttle to Manhattan. Don't buy that ticket! On these pages, we present looks from the designer collections that are just a cab ride away. Before you shop, here are five trends to consider.

Fuchsia felted wool military jacket, $1,895; black knit multi-tiered skirt, $4,425. Both by Giorgio Armani at Bloomingdale's. Black leather platform heels, $690 at Salvatore Ferragamo. Earrings, $125 at Bloomingdale's. Circle of Fire gold ring by Carrera y Carrera, $7,900 at Alpha Omega.

BOLD COLOR

TURQUOISE, PURPLE, HOT PINK AND ORANGE GRAB ATTENTION THIS SEASON.

Versace's collection in particular, with its restrained silhouettes—noteworthy for a house that has traditionally been known for maxing out—presents a perfect example of how to put the overall sensibility into action. In addition to its shocking shade, Donatella's "litmus paper blue" coat (page 38) encompasses several key trends: the rounded shoulder, the short sleeves and the collarless neckline. Giorgio Armani's military-inspired jacket in hot pink mohair wool (page 33) offers another contemporary spin on simplicity.

ABSOLUTE CHIC

The infatuation with all things frilly and girly has reached its end. Enter the worldly, grown-up and pulled-together woman. Not surprisingly, her look comes across as assertive and pricey. Take Oscar de la Renta's short-sleeve houndstooth dress (pages 34 & 35). Sexy without screaming it and finished off with fabulous jewelry (for which you'll find no knock-offs), the piece has a perfect fit. Add seductive platform sandals with a sky-high heel, and you're all set. On a more nostalgic note, John Galliano's dazzling 1940s-inspired collection for Christian Dior provides a lesson in high fashion. Couture details, including deep fur sleeves, cuffs and collars; glamorous suits; and drop-dead gorgeous gowns, in bright colors like purple and pistachio, keep it luxurious.

RED CARPET

Even as trends take hold, we count on certain designers to stay faithful to what's feminine, beautiful and timeless. Case in point: Valentino, who remains one of the most sought-after by Hollywood and high society. His strapless gown (page 36) tells the whole story this season. Throw on some jewelry, and you'll be the picture of red-carpet glamour. And the rest of the collection, you ask? Another nod to the '40s, with silk blouses under felted wool suits for power lunches and with fur trim for semiformal events. Two more designers that never fail to deliver are Chanel and Ralph Lauren (page 37). Karl Lagerfeld updates Chanel's look with college-girl styling: colorful tweed checks, rugby vests and plastic accessories. For evening, however, he returns to the classic elegance that has become the label's hallmark. At Ralph Lauren, nighttime means a silk, back-revealing gown with funnel-neck detail and an organza ruffle. Perfect for your next benefit.

Brown and beige short-sleeve wool houndstooth dress with patent embellishment by Oscar de la Renta, $3,490, at Nordstrom at Natick Collection. Brown suede heels with patent peep-toe, $595, at Oscar de la Renta in NYC. Ava Ring by Carrera y Carrera, $13,150 at Alpha Omega. Yellow sapphire cuff, $6,800; champagne diamond cuff, $9,000; white diamond cuff, $14,800. All at Arlene and Roberta.

WELL-SUITED

THE MOST MODERN SUITS COME TWO WAYS: LEAN, MEAN AND MINIMALIST OR WITH AN HOUR-GLASS SILHOUETTE, FOLLOWING THE '40S TREND

Frida Giannini's version for Gucci emphasizes the waist and the shoulder, while the puffed short sleeves make it a winner at important meetings and cocktail parties. With this type of suit, keep your accessories black. Or, if you feel experimental, buy colorful matching shoes and earrings. Whatever you do, don't wear colored hose. If you don't feel adventurous in the suit department, opt for a dark grey or heathered beige monochromatic look with a lean pant and close-fitting jacket. Forgo the cotton shirt for a knit top, in the same hue but a slightly different fabric. Top it all off with a knit scarf.

WAIST WATCHERS

With the exception of the '20s looks, the season's collections call attention to the mid-section. We're seeing everything belted at the waist or emphasizing it. At Salvatore Ferragamo (page 31), seemingly simple cocktail dresses in satin are flattering thanks to their feminine line. At Hermès (page 39), Jean Paul Gaultier reins in an otherwise voluminous fringed-shawl-collared wool coat with a classic belt. So when you're wondering how to complete that outfit, whether it's a dress, coat, cardigan or suit... cinch it. —Victor Vargas

Nordstrom fashion creative director Gregg Andrews dishes on the department store's local debut and legendary service

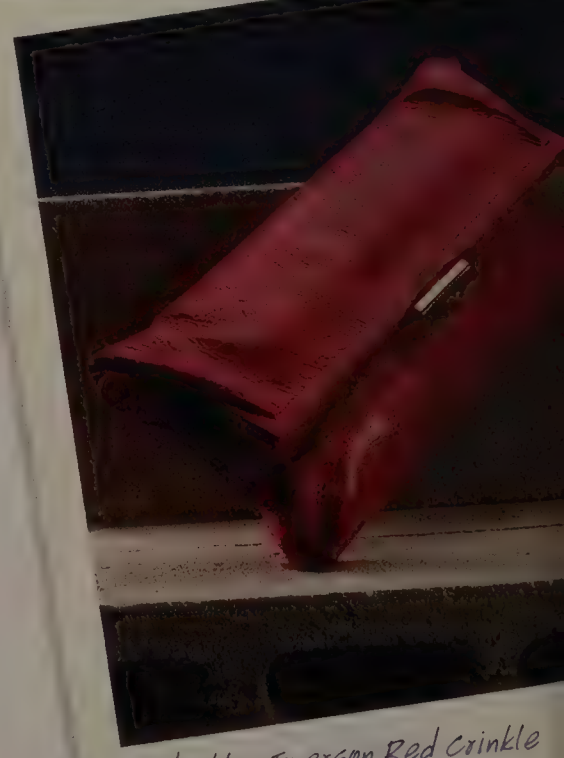
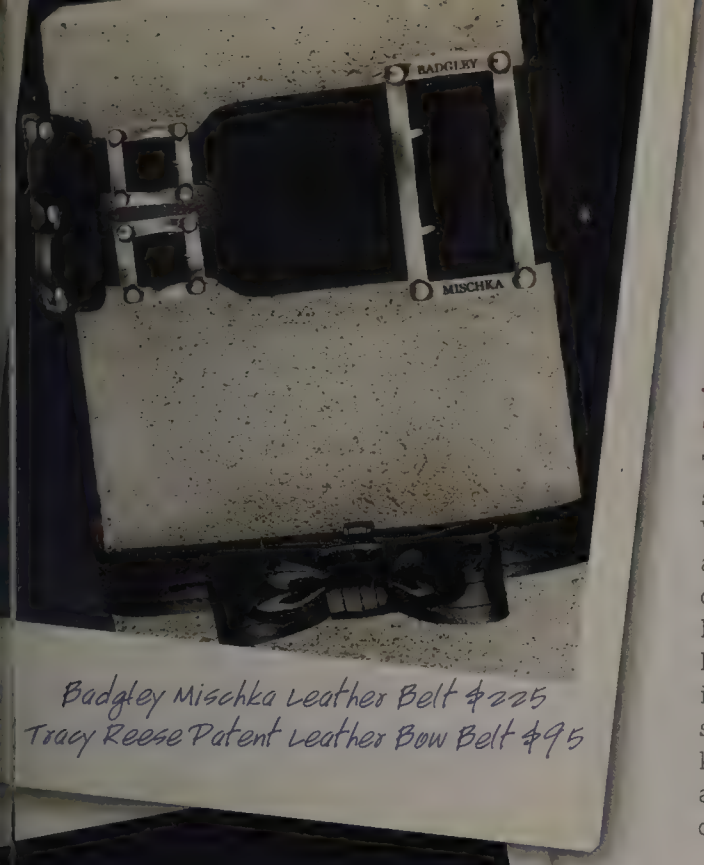
Providence is nice and all, but we're sure happy to have Nordstrom a little closer to home. The Seattle-born department store opens its first Massachusetts location at the Natick Collection this month. For Bostonians, that means a one-stop shop for the season's classic styles and better shoe options. (Seriously. Check it out.) The IMPROPER's Victor Vargas caught up with fashion creative director Gregg Andrews to talk about the store. Andrews got his start with the company 23 years ago as a shoe salesman. Today, the Los Angeles native oversees a team that travels the country producing fashion events.

Victor Vargas: What finally brought Nordstrom to our neck of the woods? We recognize Boston as a fashion destination in New England, and it was the right time and place to bring Nordstrom in. Natick has a light of growth around it; there's a vibrancy, a fresh vibe to it, that we really wanted to be a part of.



VV: What is Nordstrom's philosophy? Our goal is to offer fashion that meets [your] lifestyle in an atmosphere that's welcoming and friendly and easy to shop. Our salespeople are more like personal stylists. Customers can find someone that understands them and their needs.

VV: Describe the typical Nordstrom customer. There really isn't a typical Nordstrom customer, [but] one thing that defines them is that they are looking for an efficient, easy experience. The days of window shopping are over. Our customers do their window shopping in magazines and on the Internet and come in knowing exactly what they want.



VV: Your customer service is legendary in the retail world. Why is that? We offer "Personal Touch," a totally complimentary service where a customer can enlist the help of a personal shopper to help them find whatever they need—whether they're looking to buy a whole new wardrobe or just looking for a foundation garment that actually fits them. There's no expectation of what you need to spend, either. And if you're looking for a gift for someone who shops at our store, you can call up their Personal Touch shopper and find out exactly what they need, which is great for holidays and birthdays. That's shopping that doesn't get returned.

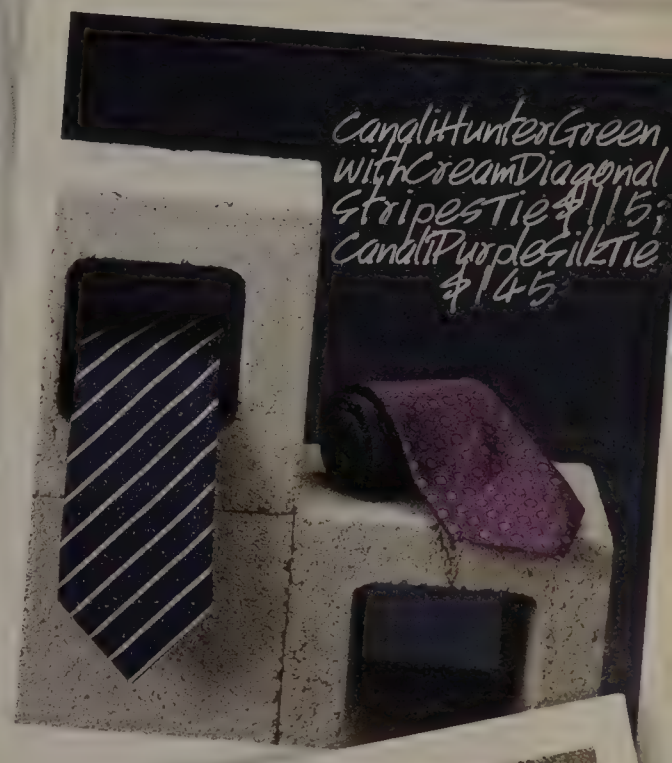
VV: Nordstrom started out in 1901 as a shoe store. Tell us about your beloved shoe department. The shoe department is really the heartbeat of the store. It comprises five different categories: Salon, Women, BP, Men and Kids. Our goal is to offer a wide array of shoes, so that regardless of your needs, you can find a pair. The Salon shoes are our designer and high-profile brands, such as Jimmy Choo and Manolo Blahnik. The Women's section is fashionable, but at introductory prices—brands like BCBG. Our BP section is more about quick fashion by some lesser-known labels and European entities—brands such as Guess. Our Men's department holds the full range of footwear, from Allan Edmonds right up to Prada.



VV: What are you doing in terms of beauty and grooming? The entire department is an open-sell environment, meaning the customer can just walk in and grab their favorite moisturizer or mascara without waiting for a salesperson. If you're looking for a one-on-one consultation or you're not sure what product you might need, we do have specialists there to help.

VV: What fashion trends are you pushing for the fall? For women, we're showing polished chic—stealth and sophistication. It's understated but powerful. Tailoring in suits is important, too. We're seeing a return to the little tailored jacket with a great pair of pants. There's also a slight '80s vibe to it, a stronger shoulder line on fingertip-length jackets. It's very "tough/chic," with menswear influences [like] pinstripes and tweeds. However, it's not about looking androgynous at all; it's about showing that hourglass shape. The trend is still very feminine, but powerful and not overtly sexy. We're also seeing the return of bright accent colors like bold cobalt blues, fuchsias, oranges, reds—all paired with black.

VV: What about for men? Men are continuing to dress up. There's a return to elegance, a trend of modernized classics. In terms of silhouette, we're seeing a much leaner cut, closer to the body. Suits are one- or two-button, with slimmer-cut pants. We're seeing the return of pleats (single and slim). Men are going out and looking for that third piece again, whether it's a blazer or jacket, or even a cardigan. Again, we're not talking about your grandfather's cardigan. It's in a flat knit and cut slim, and it adds a look of polished refinement. We have to remember that there's an entire generation of men who've never worn a suit, so it's fun for them now to dress up a little. Even in denim, the look is more polished—not distressed or torn—with a higher rise.

VV: How was your overall buy tailored to the Boston market? This is an excellent time for fashion, especially for the New England woman. We're seeing more tailoring—girly, but not overly fussy. In Collectors, our designer section, a lot of our newest brands like Versace, Nina Ricci, YSL [and] Carolina Herrera are perfect for that woman who's looking for an updated classic style. It's all very polished and very tailored. IB

ALL DRESSED UP

FASHION EDITOR VICTOR VARGAS
PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALAN CRESTO/BERNSTEIN & ANDRIULLI

WOMEN HAVE NOTHING ON MEN THIS FALL. In fact, the collections for both sexes show overlapping sensibilities that seem like a natural fit for New Englanders. Case in point: Minimalism makes its mark, with design houses driving the aesthetic here (Italo Zucchelli at Calvin Klein) and abroad (Prada and Raf Simons at Jil Sander). Zucchelli, for one, continues to push his refined-modernist vision with techno fabrics and razor-sharp tailoring. Look for fitted suits in every shade of grey, as well as entire leather outfits that seem more Gattaca than Guns 'n' Roses. Outerwear's all-important in this town, and this fall brings some high-tech options: shearling coats and bomber jackets, encased in plastic as a shield against the snow (both also hot trends for women). The Brahmin crowd should be happy to hear that dressing up is in vogue again. The movement has less to do with wearing a banker's suit, though, than it does with loading up on accessories. Think felt wool hats, long scarves, gloves and a great pair of shoes.

Try these easy-to-follow fads, and you'll be set for work and play.

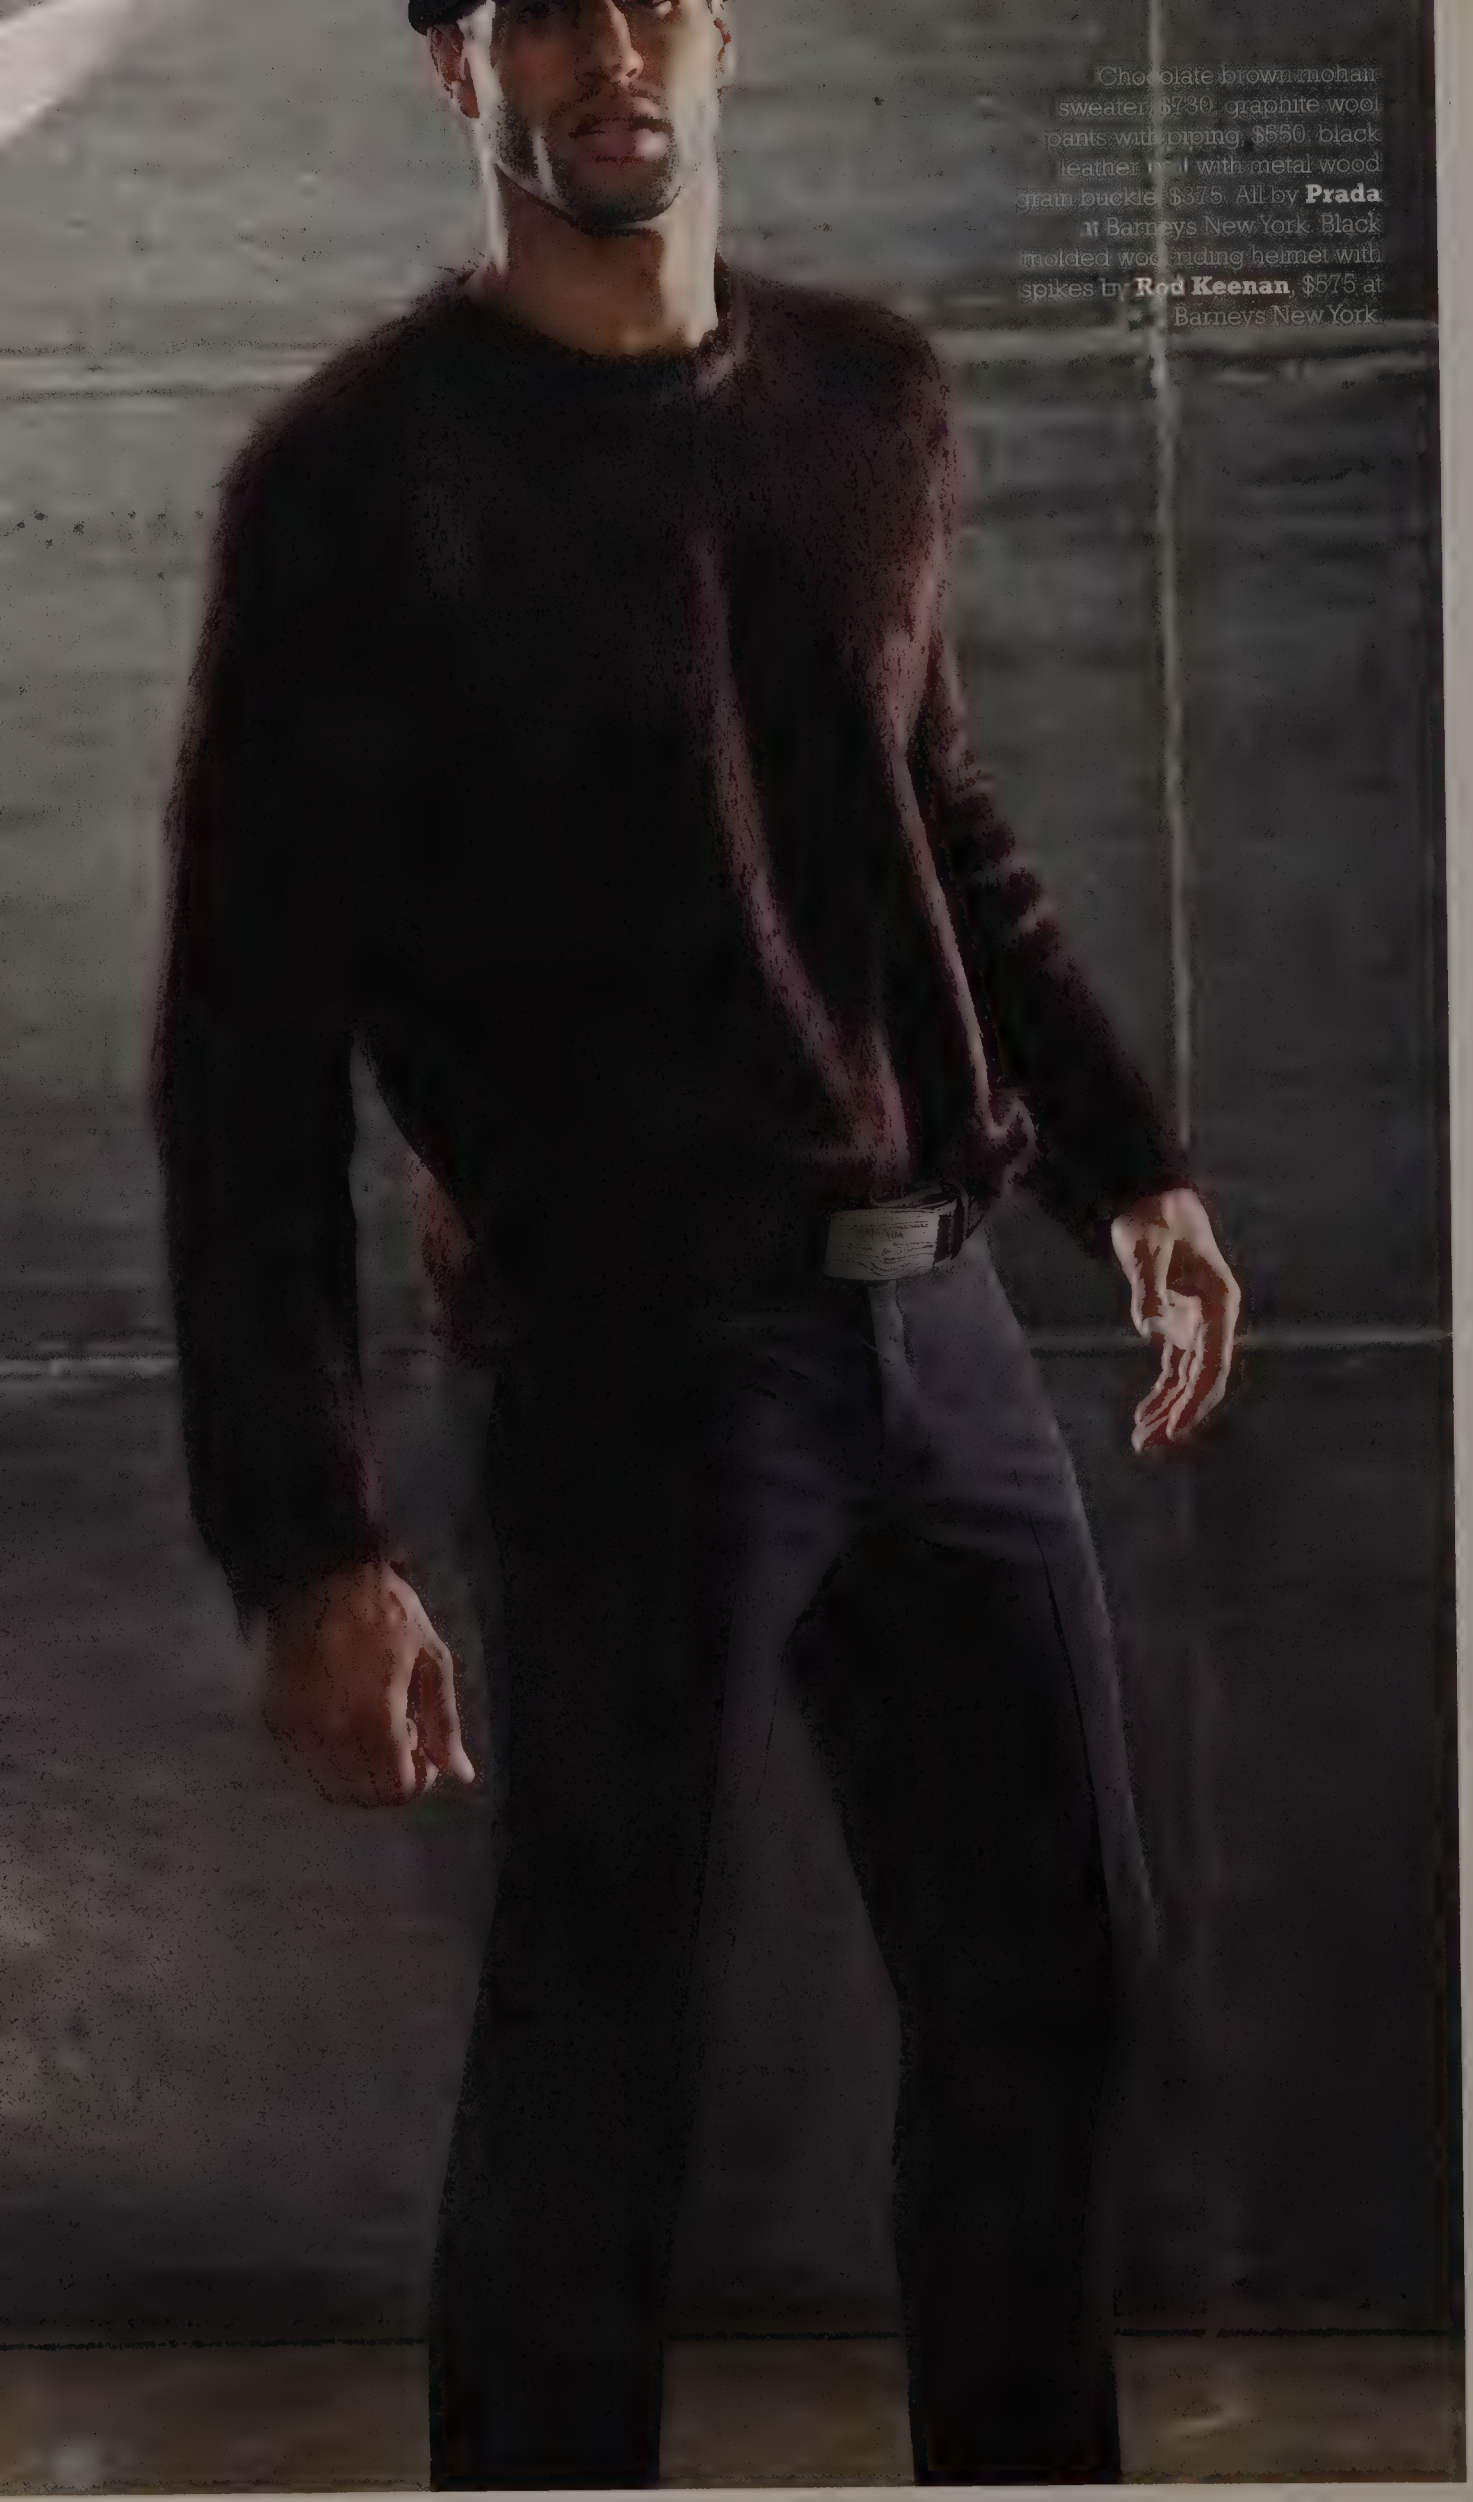
KNITWEAR

Ever fashion-forward, Prada sets the standard for knitwear this fall, pairing colorful, puffy sweaters and coats with stirrup pants. While that may sound wild, the plush tops actually leave you feeling warm and fuzzy. Try them with slim-fitting pants (page 46), tucking in the front to show off your belt. If you're more of a prep-ster, look no further than the classic elegance of Polo Ralph Lauren's navy wool cardigan with leather-covered buttons (page 42), worn with baggy tweed bottoms. It's the 1940s all over again.

DÉGRADÉ

Over the past few seasons, designers have been experimenting with colors through tie-dye and, most recently, "dégradé," as insiders call it. The latter's effect is a gradual shifting of hues from light to dark or vice-versa, and it's best exemplified by menswear designer Paul Helbers for Louis Vuitton (page 43). He uses "dégradé" in everything from coats and blazers to pants and shirts. A word to the wise: Implement this trend sparingly; don't overdo it—individual pieces mixed into an otherwise ordinary outfit look fresh and modern.

GENEROUS PROPORTIONS



In a season where knitwear is king, two of the major trends come from Z Zegna and Burberry Prorsum. Alessandro Sartori for Z Zegna offers long mohair sweaters under short tailored jackets, as well as oversized shawl-collared cardigans with fitted leather breeches and ankle boots. Amidst a sea of military references, Christopher Bailey's collection for Burberry Prorsum plays with proportion. The result is a mix of elongated sweaters and tailoring. Try cable-knit tops under tailored officer's jackets, V-necks, cardigans and crewnecks, with slim-fitting, cropped pants and coats in leather, nylon and silk—all belted at the waist.

DANDY

The wave of designers incorporating nostalgic, dressed-up looks and accessories signals a new, relaxed elegance. At Salvatore Ferragamo (page 47), designer Massimiliano Giornetti's collection has equestrian and dandified references, with an ultraluxurious edge. You probably own some of the staple pieces already: tweed topcoats and leather jackets. Update them with velvet trousers and silk scarves. On a more modern note, the late GianFranco Ferré, whose sudden death on June 17 left the fashion world bereft of an unparalleled level of excellence in ready-to-wear, showed mohair sweaters with vivid matching scarves, long-haired goat fur coats, alligator jackets with beautifully crafted belts, and wallet chains.

LIGHT BRIGHT

The most overtly forward statement in men's fashion comes from Lucas Ossendrijver at Lanvin (page 44). His silhouettes are body-hugging and his color palette predominantly black, with bold flashes of amethyst, kelly green, gold and coral. Satin sneakers in fuchsia and electric blue as well as woven scarves worn as ties in bright hues complete the look. Michael Kors' all-American-jet-set rendition of this trend features classic wardrobe staples in luxurious fabrics (tweeds, felted wools, etc.), updated with taxi-cab yellow, hazmat orange and royal-blue knit separates. The message from Kors and his fellow pack leaders is clear—get your hands on bright knits and separates, and splurge on Old World accessories. The season's rule of thumb: Less is more.

MY THREE SONS

In Four Minus Three: A Mother's Story, Waltham resident Guitelle H. Sandman recounts the tragic deaths of her boys.

Losing not one but three sons is a catastrophe beyond imagining. But it happened to Guitelle and Bob Sandman. Twenty years after the accidental death of their boy Jon, Guitelle took a course in therapeutic writing, inviting "a meeting with someone from your past," which brought a startling visitation: "The person turned and peered at me. Goodness, it looked like Jon's freckled face, his big brown eyes." Guitelle continued to write, with great dignity and restraint, about the lives, productive and normal, colorful and complex, of her three boys. Jon had an independence and ease that put him on his own rather happy track, though sadly he died after college. Only 16 months earlier, his brother Roger had passed away. Cerebral palsy's developmental complexities colored Roger's life, though hard-won accomplishments touchingly came his way. Mark—of the band Morphine—was their oldest son, whose zigzagging into hipness and eventual great fame was puzzling and even challenging to his parents. He died on stage in 1999. Sandman explores how a long marriage, salty grieving and binding up all the sadness have helped them survive. Their lively, successful daughter, Martha, also has sustained their broken hearts.

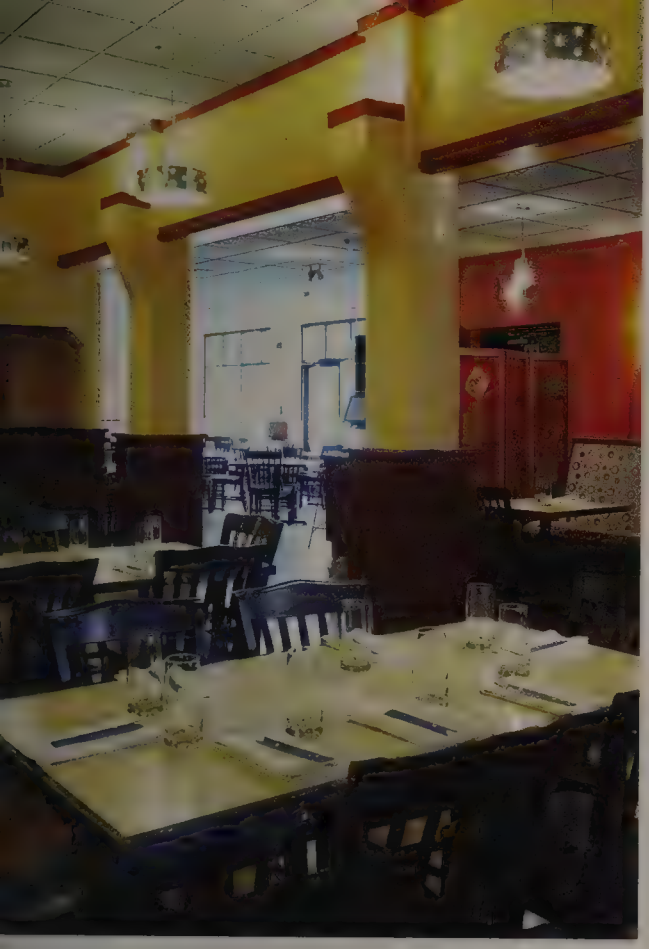
Cambridge's 1 Kendall Square, home to the popular Blue Room, decided last year to spice up the neighborhood by adding a new restaurant. Armed with peppercorns and chilis, restaurateur Zheng Hu opened Anise, determined to make creative, authentic Chinese food available to this savvy constituency. While Anise focuses on cuisine from China's warm, humid Sichuan province—a region known for its spicy, sometimes fiery fare—Zheng has included a number of more familiar, tame offerings like the ubiquitous General Gao's chicken, a dish so popular with Boston diners that it has its own local name in lieu of the original moniker, General Tso's.



An array of appetizers started us out on the right track. Pork wontons ($6), 10 large, juicy, pork-filled delights wrapped in delicate, tender pastry, proved particularly memorable. Their warm flavors and mouth-pleasing texture made them an excellent kickoff to the meal. Another enjoyable stuffed treat, small crescent-shaped pork dumplings ($6) with a moist, meaty filling, came bathed in a delicious sesame sauce. Sesame pancakes ($6) brought three crispy, exotically spiced pancakes cut into triangular quarters. Their savory flavor, enhanced by a lively ginger sauce, paralleled their soft, pleasant texture. Finally, dan dan noodles ($6) boasted the best texture of all, perhaps because they so surprised me. Firm, bright green linguini-shaped noodles came coated in a provocative sauce of sesame, chili, soy and ground pork. Their perfumed, haunting flavors had a delightful finish that lingered after the substantial heat of chilis had subsided.

Less successful among the appetizers were Peking ravioli ($7) and fried chicken wings ($8). The primary problem with both was the texture—an unexpected contrast to the treats that had preceded them. The stuffing of the ravioli—well spiced, reasonably moist meat—was overwhelmed by the thick, dense pastry wrapped around it, while the chicken wings seemed undercooked and tough.

Moving to principal dishes, my favorite turned out to be the double-cooked pork bellies ($13). "Twice-cooked pork," a Sichuan specialty, involves boiling the meat first with fresh ginger and salt, then cutting it into thin slices and stir-frying them in a shallow layer of green peppers and black bean sauce seasoned with chilis and scallions. Whether bacon (pork belly) is the usual cut used for this dish or a particular variant thought up by Anise, the result was the most delicious of the main courses I tried. Unfortunately, my son couldn't get beyond the dish's name and share my enjoyment even though he knows that bacon comes from the underside of a pig, and bacon is one of his favorite foods. Instead, he automatically locked onto his Chinese restaurant favorite, General Gao's chicken ($12), a dish associated with Hunan, a region to the west of Sichuan province. According to tradition, General Tso's chicken—as it's called in most places outside of New England—was invented by the wife of a 19th-century Qing Dynasty general to reward him after a victory in battle. It has been a longtime staple in American-Chinese restaurants, catering to the same taste that makes sweet and sour pork so popular. Anise's version contained morsels of boneless chicken, fried crisp and then perfec coated with a dry red pepper glaze so as be sweet but not cloyi crunchy and pleasan spicy. A garnish of fre crisp snow peas, lettu and firm but tender pe pers completed the e semble.

Boneless duck m with Chinese flo chives ($19) consisted slender strips of du tossed with chives a ginger and garnish with a nasturtium bl som. The duck turn out to be moist and flavorful but not as t der as I had expected. Also-tough slice orange flavored beef ($13) joined the tersweet nuances of orange peel with a combination of sesame and other spice flavors that made up for the chewy text of the beef. Rabbit on-the-bone brai with fresh tangerine peel ($16) combi mouth-numbing heat with the citric o tones of tangerine. The dish's fiery cha ter may have come from Sichuan pepp corns or from a heavy dose of ch evidence of which I found at the bott of the plate.

Of the seafood offerings, the scall with Sichuan garlic sauce ($16) were cious and luxurious, their silky texture sweet flavor contrasting smartly with silient shoots of bamboo and earthy mu rooms in a rich, dark sauce. Wild shr with fresh minced garlic ($15) brou nine firm shrimp in a mild sauce that c have used more garlic, but again, slice perfectly cooked carrots and zucc added additional flavor and texture to preparation. quette seating along the walls and comfortable chairs on the other side. Illumination from hanging fixtures and sconces is minimal, but large windows let in outside light early in the evening. A small seating area furnished with low rattan chairs provides a comfortable waiting venue, although it was unnecessary on any of my three early weekday visits as few tables were occupied.

The prices at Anise at first struck me as aggressive, especially compared with many other Chinese restaurants. Ironically, my favorite dishes—the wontons, sesame pancakes, dan dan noodles and twice-cooked pork bellies—were the least expensive, while the pricey duck did not merit the elevated tariff. However, when I discovered Chef Yujun Zhou's "tasting menu"—in which one is given a choice of five of his special creations in generous portions for a total price of $25—I revised my initial impression and concluded that Anise delivers real value. The authenticity of its cuisine, as well as its cloth napkins and upscale china and glassware, remove it from competition with many Chinese restaurants and make it a place where enterprising diners can explore unusual, delicious preparations and still bring along their less adventurous friends to indulge in more familiar fare. ESK's new wine director speaks...

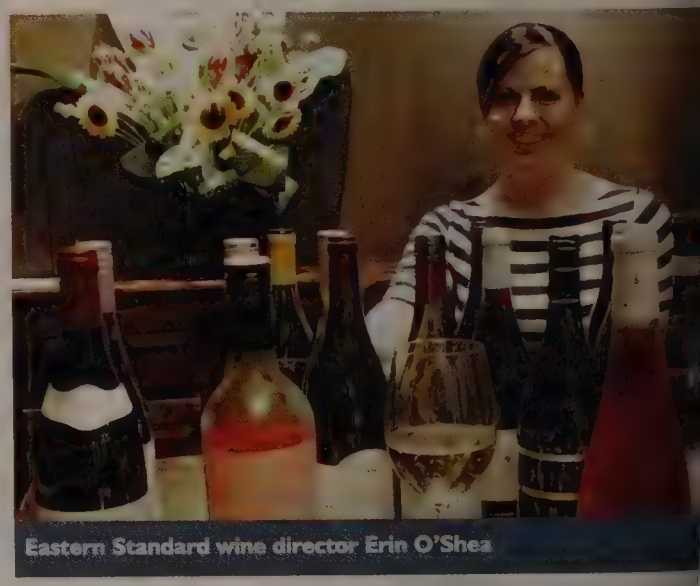
BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX



When you're ready to try a new wine, says Erin O'Shea, don't let unfamiliar nomenclature stand in your way.

"Pronunciation is always a challenge," says O'Shea, the newly appointed wine director of Eastern Standard Kitchen & Drinks. And not just because she's an enthusiastic proponent of Slovenian options, with all those intriguing blends of varietal consonants and vowels.

Most recently wine director for a bunch of Ken Oringer's restaurants, O'Shea recalls a particularly memorable order from a diner at Clio.

"He ordered Chee-auntie," she says with a nearly audible cringe. "Oh, God, that sticks out in my head!"

Ever the professional, O'Shea suggested an alternate Italian wine ("I didn't have Chianti on the list") and moved on. What's important, she says, is to introduce "more of an eclectic list" to diners who are stuck in a comfort zone of "safe choices." New World chardonnays and pinot noirs may be "easy to pronounce," she says, but it's a big wine world out there, and she's eager to bring the best of it to Eastern Standard with a list that'll change "every three months or so."

Eastern Standard wine director Erin O'Shea

"California and New Zealand are so overexposed," she adds. Right now, O'Shea is focusing on wines from Slovenia and Switzerland.

So, is there a Swiss wine that goes well with chocolate?

Whole Foods Plus Partial Farm

It's a big company now, but Whole Foods is still "trying very hard to stay local," according to one of the leaders of Slow Food Boston—a local nonprofit that advocates sustainability and biodiversity through educational events. Case in point: At the Brighton Whole Foods Market, you'll find a local farmer offering super-fresh produce at a temporary stand in the parking lot every Tuesday from 4 to 7 pm through Oct. 16.

So what happens when, for example, local strawberries are featured outside while California berries are stocked inside the store? Food fight?

Absolutely not, says Slow Food's Willow Blish. "Strawberries from California are perfectly fine, but these [local] strawberries are special; they're only here for a month. It's about cooperation, not competition.

Raising the Chocolate Bar

Time to pack away the swimsuit and dust off the baking pans: Langham Hotels Boston is sponsoring a chocolate recipe contest to celebrate the 19th season of its famous Chocolate Bar.

Here's how it works: You submit your favorite original recipe by midnight on Sept. 22 (e-mail: chocolateidol@langhamhotels.com). On Saturday, Oct. 6, attendees at the Chocolate Bar will vote for their favorite dessert on the spot. If you're the winner, your confection will join the roster of 125-plus desserts offered at the weekly Chocolate Bar through June, and you'll receive a Chocolate Bar VIP pass granting unlimited access for the entire season. Did I say pack away the swimsuit? THROW it away.

Inexplicable

It's called Cafeteria, but it isn't one. Set to open at the corner of Newbury and Gloucester streets—historically a Bermuda Triangle for restaurants—Cafeteria will be a 200-seat eatery featuring a menu of Italian-influenced "small plates" and the ubiquitous "creative cocktails." Chef will be Lawrence Scottie, most recently of Bomboni Café. IB

WINE

Dolcetto Done Right

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

If you root for the underdog, you've got to love the dolcetto grape. It plays a distinct third fiddle in the northwestern Italian region of Piedmont, forever overshadowed by the big bruisers, nebbiolo and barbera. For me, good dolcetto provides no less pleasure than these two more intensely structured grapes; it just fits different moods. Dolcetto's the carefree wine for warmer weather and lighter fare. It's smooth, plummy and sensuous. Or at least it should be. Dolcetto promises a lot, but doesn't always deliver.

Constantly in the hunt over the past number of years and rarely satisfied, I'd almost given up on the grape—until my most recent blind tasting series, when a number of wonderful bottles emerged. Maybe it's a style thing, but it's as though, all of a sudden, the flavors and textures I'm looking for have come into vogue. So I'm drinking a lot of dolcetto lately. (Moderately, with food, of course.) Here are the winners, presented in ascending order of preference. All are highly recommended late-summer wines.

Giacosa Fratelli, Dolcetto d'Alba "San Rocco," 2006 ($15).

As with most of these producers, Giacosa is primarily known for his more famous individual vineyard "cru" Barolo. This wine shows the telltale purplish rim you'll generally find with well-made dolcetto, making it an easy mark at a blind tasting. It's very floral, with a smoky anise undertone. Softly textured, the dark berry fruit flavors are accented with green herbs and understated spice. It finishes with a bitter, fennel-like twist. Delicious with charcuterie and semihard cheeses.

Prunotto, Dolcetto d'Alba, 2006 ($17).

This traditional producer also makes a full range of powerhouse individual vineyard Barolos and Barbarescos; his dolcetto's done in the "serious" mode, with the highest acidity of any of the wines recommended and the chalkiest tannins, but it's successful because of the fruit's brilliance. Chocolatey in both aroma and flavor, this dolcetto's striking blackberry flavor fills the palate. It finishes with an edgy spice and perhaps a touch of almond that echoes the char you might get from the grill. Chicken or swordfish would make an ideal accompaniment.

Castello del Poggio, Dolcetto d'Asti "Monferrato," 2005 ($13).

Extra smooth and mellow in flavor, this wine has a strawberry-like, warm jammy aroma. Round and creamy on the palate, with cherryish flavors that linger into the finish, it couldn't be more different than the Prunotto. There's plenty of charm here, in a lighter mode. Beautifully balanced, enjoy it chilled down a bit and the flavor persists. Consider this an ideal summertime red that would serve nicely with cold cuts, salads or grilled herb-rubbed fish. It also could pair with pizza.

Boroli, Dolcetto d'Alba "Madonna di Como," 2005 ($16).

This wine has a richness and body that set it apart. Its fragrance is also quite complex, with cocoa, plum, violet and peppery scents mingled together. Smooth and layered, with waves of chocolate, juicy black fruit and spice, it's a joy to drink. Because of the soft tannins, it works with a number of fish and meat dishes, although I'd suggest barbecued chicken.

Colle dei Venti, Dolcetto d'Alba, 2004 ($13).

From a small Piemontese family estate, this stunning wine has a smoky pipe tobacco, herb-like fruit aroma and is velvety soft, with plush flavors that lean toward prune and raisin. Intense and mellow at the same time, it's got a lingering finish of spice and chocolate. It'll make you step back and say, "Wow!"

Well-balanced enough to be versatile with food, this dolcetto can accompany a wide range of dishes. Enjoy it with a hamburger, thick and juicy.

Renato Ratti, Dolcetto d'Alba, "Colombe," 2005 ($17).

In a great field, this was the runaway winner. First off, it's textbook dolcetto: creamy and soft with lots of fruit but an interesting, smoky edge. This single vineyard wine's aromatics—roses, sweet red berries and a tar undertone—are beautiful as well. Even its mellow, charming fruit carries a suggestion of basil and other fragrant herbs. Above all, it's satisfying as a glass of wine in and of itself. You don't need food, although I'd opt for some hard cheese, berries and freshly baked bread. IB

WED./SEPT. 5

Books: On the Road Again

More than 50 years ago, undoubtedly with the help of strong coffee and a handful of bennies, Jack Kerouac taped sheets of paper end-to-end and created a 120-foot scroll that could roll through his typewriter as he tapped away on long binges of beat. The scroll is now on display in his hometown of Lowell at the Boott Cotton Mills Museum, and in honor of the golden anniversary of On the Road's publication, deli Olive That & More hosts a marathon reading. As you'll undoubtedly be in the mood to drive, concerts, readings and performances will take place all week to spur return trips to the holy road. *For a listing of events, see www.ontheroadinlowell.org. Technical

SAT./SEPT. 1

Museums: Get Your Artsy Kicks

Aerosmith drummer Joey Kramer's newest project isn't about music. He and friend John Nichols have opened a high-end streetwear shop, Technical, on Newbury, and to kick things off they'll transform the store into a gallery of sorts for one night. The work they'll display isn't the traditional kind on canvas, though, but skate decks and Vans sneakers, decorated (spray-painted, airbrushed, acrylic-ed) by local artists. The wearable works will include Archie Bunker–themed shoes and other surprises. Technical, 230 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-0003). www.technicalshops.com. 9 pm. Free. —AK

CityScope: Punch Your Liver in the Face

If you ask us, Friday's just not Friday without a festive afterwork drink or two, and the Sudbury River Legendary Brewfest offers the chance to amplify your end-of-the-week stressbusting with a choice of more than 100 imported and craft beers, plus fromage and other apps, and live entertainment. Once you've pounded a few, grab the controls and experience the thrill of buzzed slot-car racing. It'll be just like junior high, except instead of getting hammered off a pilfered mix of rum, Metaxa and cinnamon schnapps, you'll be respectably swigging a pale ale with tones of citrus and bready malts, along the scenic banks of the Sudbury. As an added bonus, proceeds benefit the American Cancer Society. Eurobrew Inc., 58 Union St., Ashland (508-881-9900. www.eurobrews.com. 4:30-7:30 pm. $15. —NA

TUE./SEPT. 11

Books: Phantom Picks

You're so addicted to Phantom Gourmet. Saturday and Sunday mornings you watch the restaurant-review show like a kid hooked on cartoons. You're just dying to know: Who is that phantom?! We can't deliver the mystery critic in person, but we can point you to the next best thing: Dave Andelman. The loud-talking TV host will discuss and sign copies of Phantom Gourmet Guide to Boston's Best Restaurants 2008 at the Harvard Coop. Here's your chance to interrogate him about his silent eating partner. Shh… we think it might be all in the family. Harvard Coop, 1400 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-499-2000). www.harvard.bkstore.com. 7 pm. Free. —AK

TUE.–THU./SEPT. 4–6

Movies: Uncut and Blown Up

Raising Arizona, The Princess Bride and Napoleon Dynamite—you've seen these indie classics a million times on cable, but have you ever watched them outside on a state-of-the-art, 40' x 20' inflatable high-definition screen? Now's your chance at the IFC Free Film Fest in Copley Square. In addition, local filmmakers showcase their shorts (films, that is), while event sponsors give away $25 in music downloads and a chance at an HD camera. Don't forget to bring some movies with you, as DVDs will be collected for donation to the Boston Medical Center's pediatric unit. *Copley Square. http://ifc.com/static/sections/freefilmfest. Satire in Its Infancy

The Nanny Diaries proves none too revealing

BY SEAN BURNS

Over the past decade or so, there's been a deeply annoying shift in our popular culture. Have you noticed that having kids has changed from something people just do into some sort of embodiment of all that is noble, decent and good about the world? There seems to be a pervasive sanctification of child-rearing these days. Every time a celebrity breeds, for some reason I end up learning their damn kid's name. Honestly, I resent the fact that I know who Shiloh and Suri are. But somehow, children have become the hot fashion accessories, especially if you can manage to adopt one. They're like new Chanel bags, except they cry and poop a lot.

It's an attitude skewered briefly during the stronger moments of The Nanny Diaries, a deeply confused and frustrating adaptation of the bestseller by Emma McLaughlin and Nicola Kraus. Directed by the husband-and-wife team of Robert Pulcini and Shari Springer Berman, who received a lot of attention for their reworking of Harvey Pekar's American Splendor comics into the 2003 movie of the same name, this occasionally pointed glimpse at Manhattan baby fever flirts with savage satire, only to retreat into familiar chick-lit clichés.

Scarlett Johansson stars as Annie Braddock, a mopey college grad from a working-class town unsure of pretty much everything except what she doesn't want to do when she grows up. That finance degree looks like the key to a grim future, but her overbearing mother (Donna Murphy) won't entertain Annie's dreams of a career in anthropology.

A chance meeting and a few misunderstandings in Central Park rather ridiculously set our heroine on an entirely unforeseen career path: the new nanny for adorable young Grayer (Nicholas Art), the son of moneyed Upper East Side royalty.

Laura Linney gives a dazzling, layered performance as Mrs. X. She's shrill, demanding, casually abusive and yet never once drops the phony, ear-to-ear grin that's plastered across her face. Speaking in an upper-crust accent riddled with affectations, Linney is a nightmare of rigid entitlement, but she's too shrewd an actress to go for easy caricature. As the film wears on, we can spot faint cracks in Mrs. X's armor, little glimmers of aching vulnerability beneath the shellacked smile, which are tamped down almost as quickly as they appear.

It's no accident that one of the characters is spotted reading The Devil Wears Prada, as the majority of The Nanny Diaries is concerned with Annie's constant suffering under Mrs. X's bizarre mood swings. Basically, our heroine does all the work cooking and cleaning and teaching, while Linney busies herself shopping, socializing and going to meetings where like-minded, wealthy women gather with panels of experts to discuss what wonderful mothers they are. The movie's most incisive reveal cuts from one of these self-congratulatory sessions to a view of all the children sitting in the waiting room with their nannies.

Scarlett Johansson is not having an easy time with the current It Girl phase of her career, as she's at the point where she's popular enough to get offered all sorts of roles she isn't quite right for. There's a very specific appeal to Johansson's smoky voice and mannerisms, but she's not particularly suited for slapstick, no matter how often Woody Allen keeps casting her as a comedienne. She's too smooth and dreamy a screen presence to pull off Annie's panicked bumbling, and her eventual angry face-off with Linney is a low-energy dud, especially since it's staged in such a way that the two aren't even face-to-face.

Springer Berman and Pulcini's American Splendor earned kudos for rupturing the reality of their picture with first-person interviews and often replacing the actors with their real-life counterparts. They try some similar trickery every now and again in The Nanny Diaries, whether they're setting scenes inside exhibits at the Museum of Natural History or having characters address people in other scenes, but it feels forced.

There's also entirely too much time spent on a pointless romantic subplot with Fantastic Four's Chris Evans, here called "Harvard Hottie" in that irritating Sex and the City fashion of giving everybody cutesy nicknames. Much better are a handful of scenes with Splendor star Paul Giamatti, who drops by the house from time to time as the mysterious Mr. X. This usually endearing actor has somehow frozen his facial muscles into a mask of self-regard, blithely cheating on his wife, hitting on the nanny and ignoring his child, only to register a befuddled annoyance that anybody might have a problem with that. A dark passage of the film, set at the X family's vacation house on Nantucket, dips a toe into the complex web of betrayals and denial that keeps families like this going, only to sheepishly back away when things start to get too rough.

For a few moments, you can see the movie The Nanny Diaries might have been… IB Sooner or later they were bound to run out of J Austen novels to adapt for the big screen. Scre writers Kevin Hood and Sarah Williams have a fairly clever solution to that problem: by posi ing Becoming Jane as a biography of the beloved thor, then filling in the historical gaps of Aust life with so many elements from her books tha feels like a greatest-hits collection. Doe-eyed A Hathaway holds the screen quite nicely as the y wordsmith drowning in unacceptable marriage p posals from unacceptable suitors while wishi strike out on her own in a society that offers litt independent women. The Last King of Scotl James McAvoy strikes some sparks as a rakish whose big-city bluster bristles against Austen's try propriety. It's all fairly pleasant, even thoug lian Jarrold's direction is too mild to hold a cand recent memories of Joe Wright's surprisingly h and exciting Pride & Prejudice adaptation. Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Sq and in the suburbs.)

Becoming Jane ★★½

The Bourne Ultimatum ★★★★
As propulsive, brilliantly assembled and br lessly paced as any action picture I've seen third and finest chapter in this superior spy finds Matt Damon's amnesiac assassin hea home to New York City to put together the h harrowing puzzle pieces of his lost identity. U 93 director Paul Greengrass shoots exciti with handheld cameras, supercharging the m cably choreographed cat-and-mouse sequ with a jittery, you-are-there immediacy. As al Damon deftly underplays, communicating character's inner torment strictly through his physicality and haunted stare. Joan Allen re as a jaded CIA operative who becomes Bou most unlikely ally, this time butting heads David Strathairn's oily armchair warrior. T Bourne pictures have shrewdly updated R Ludlum's Cold War novels for our more disun troubled times and seethe with a profound l faith in our leaders. There's also a harsh severity at work—the killings hurt and carry them a tremendous psychological price. T classy, sophisticated entertainment for adults an outstanding example of sheer, brute craftsmanship. (At Boston Common, Fenwa in the suburbs.)

Hairspray ★★★
A bouncy unexpected delight, this vibrant ad tion of the hit Broadway musical—itself a re ing of John Waters' subversive 1992 dan thon—might be the summer's sweetest sur Newcomer Nikki Blonsky stars as Tracy Tur a hefty hoofer dedicated to breaking the colo rier on Baltimore's hottest local dance show ing off against Michelle Pfeiffer's slatternly station manager, Tracy enlists a marvelou porting cast of progressively minded misfit outcasts to take a stand for inclusiveness dur exclusionary era. Though the gigantic fat su outlandish accent take some getting used t volta's daring, committed performance gro you, culminating in a lovely duet with his Christopher Walken. Ditching the recen in movie musicals of overediting every m into incoherence, director/choreographer Shankman favors wide angles and long shots ing us to actually see and appreciate the sheer tiousness of these bopping bodies in motio Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix ★★★½
The Harry Potter films thus far have felt like lection of tie-in products dutifully recreating body's favorite scenes as if genuflecting bef Stations of the Cross. But now, four sequels saga, it finally feels like we're watching an to-god movie. Forced to slash JK Rowling's ur 870-page novel to a trim two hours and cha rector David Yates and screenwriter Michae enberg have at last reconceived the Potter purely cinematic terms. They scrapped Quidditch nonsense and zero in on Harry cent struggle to wrap his still-forming mind the fallibility of authority figures, the fin death and the stinking unfairness of how th really works. It's a surprisingly dark and viole ing-of-age tale, and Yates finds some nifty vis allels for the character's inner journey. Young Radcliffe is growing into the role quite nic the most overqualified supporting cast in history again excels, with extra kudos going to Gary Oldman, Alan Rickman and Imelda Staunton's fascist schoolmarm. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry ★

Gallingly hypocritical, the latest slapdash effort from Adam Sandler's Happy Madison productions closes with all sorts of teary-eyed courtroom monologues, delivered directly into the camera lens, lecturing the audience about the evils of homophobia. The irony of such sentiments arriving after a full 90 minutes spent scoring cheap laughs with every moldy, offensive gay joke in the book seems truly lost on Sandler, who stars here with sitcom actor Kevin James as a couple of macho Brooklyn firefighters faking a domestic partnership in order to qualify for health benefits. In keeping with Hollywood's strange new fixation, à la Wild Hogs, that nothing in this world could possibly be more horrifying than being mistaken for a homosexual, Chuck And Larry reeks of gay panic, and the only thing more appalling than its constant barrage of mincing, queenie stereotypes is a sickening turn by Rob Schneider as the kind of hateful, buck-toothed Asian caricature that would have seemed extreme even in World War II propaganda pictures. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The King of Kong: A Fistful of Quarters ★★★½

Seth Gordon's weirdly thrilling documentary was an audience favorite at this year's Independent Film Festival of Boston. It's easy to see why. After down-on-his-luck Steve Wiebe got laid off from his job at Boeing, he bought a retro Donkey Kong machine and started playing every day. A lot. It wasn't too long before Steve had topped the game's all-time high score, a record set in 1982 by gaming industry superstar and hot sauce tycoon Billy Mitchell. As the story unspools, it's fascinating, and more than a little sad, to see how this deeply cloistered subculture rallies to keep Wiebe out of the record books. The pompous, arrogant Mitchell dodges every offer of a head-to-head competition and uses his joystick-hero status and some underhanded tactics to marginalize his good-natured challenger. It's tough to imagine getting worked up by a movie about competitive Donkey Kong, but the film becomes a curiously affecting, Rocky-ish salute to the underdog. I was on the edge of my seat. (At Kendall Square.)

No End In Sight ★★★★

With a marked absence of partisan editorializing and nary a hint of snark, this no-nonsense, just-the-facts-ma'am chronicle of our ill-fated Iraq occupation turns into a chilly autopsy of what might be the biggest foreign policy disaster of our lifetimes. Director Charles Ferguson is the anti–Michael Moore. There are no clownish pranks, and the filmmaker refuses to grant himself a second of screen time. No End in Sight is simply facts, dates, timelines, eyewitness accounts and hard evidence, and it's absolutely riveting. Beginning with the "Mission: Accomplished" photo-op that will forever live in infamy, Ferguson zeroes in on the few crucial months just after Saddam was overthrown and consults with the people who were there on the ground to present a coldly dispassionate overview of every bureaucratic botch-job you could imagine. Granted, this is hardly unfamiliar material for anybody who reads the papers, but there's something breathtaking about seeing it all presented chronologically in such a cogent, brilliantly edited, bone-dry fashion. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Ratatouille ★★½

It takes a certain amount of nerve to fashion a fantasy about a rodent in a kitchen, and so writer-director Brad Bird must be commended for his chutzpah in telling the animated tale of Remy (voiced by the great standup-comic Patton Oswalt), a rat with misguided dreams of someday becoming a gourmet chef. The film's central gimmick, which takes too long to set up and doesn't make much sense, has Remy hidden beneath the hat of loose-limbed garbage boy Linguini (Lou Romano), where he can control the lad's movements by tugging away at random strands of hair. Ratatouille has all the visual razzle-dazzle we've come to expect from those mad geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios, with unbelievable attention paid to every last bristle in Remy's fur, and several wide-screen Paris skylines more beautiful than actual photographs. And yet the material feels strangely one-dimensional, geared more towards the kids' table than to a universal audience. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

James McAvoy and Anne Hathaway only have eyes for each other in Becoming Jane

Rush Hour 3 ★½

In the sorry tradition of Beverly Hills Cop III, here's another of those years-late, breathakingly lazy threequels in which everybody involved carries on as if they've already earned their massive paychecks simply by showing up. Jackie Chan and Chris Tucker once again play mismatched cop buddies, and once again both men seem to be competing in some private wager to see who can do more damage to the English language. Jeff Nathanson's screenplay, which is really more a collection of arbitrary twists and unmotivated set pieces, sends the bickering duo to Paris in search of a mythical Triad boss. I guess a $150 million budget doesn't buy what it used to. Thanks to Brett Ratner's limp, functional direction, the City of Lights looks more like a Hollywood backlot. Chan just seems tired, and his acrobatic hijinks are more dutiful than inspiring. Tucker does what he always does: squeal, yap and ad-lib with no regard for character, his co-stars, or what's happening around him. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Simpsons Movie ★★½

A television institution, which even the most devoted fan must admit is now well past its prime, Matt Groening's dysfunctional cartoon clan makes their big-screen debut in a feature that feels at least nine years late and a few jokes short. I don't suppose there's anything particularly wrong with The Simpsons Movie, save maybe the nagging sensation of familiarity, if not contempt, and a little bit of boredom. The trademark gags arrive densely packed during the film's first 20 minutes or so, but then thin considerably after an unwieldy plot turn sends the family scattering off to Alaska. Probably a matter of logistics, the sprawling supportin gets precious little screen-time, but the rer focus on our main characters earns a couple expected emotional dividends. Still, when said and done, The Simpsons Movie feel watching two or three episodes back-to-b hardly an unpleasant experience, but mayb worth a trip to the theater. (At Boston Com Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Stardust ★★★

In his Sandman comics, as well as the terrific Good Omens, writer Neil Gaiman is at hi when he's grounding supernatural conce banal workaday realities. There's a droll, u stated comedy to Gaiman's enchanted realm director Matthew Vaughn's adaptation of hi dust nails this tricky tone better than one pr had any right to expect. This fractured fai stars Claire Danes as a star who has plumme Earth and possesses certain celestial prop sought by a rogue's gallery of villains and sters—most notably Michelle Pfeiffer's va wicked witch. Charlie Cox is the bumbling buckler who comes to our damsel's rescu these two bicker their way, screwball-style th an episodic collection of inventive set-piec throwaway gags. Danes is a bit awkward f role, but the supporting cast runs away wi film, particularly a revitalized Robert De Ni fearsome pirate with a secret. Sometimes S gets sloppy, but there's plenty of life and im tion in the margins. (At Boston Common, F and in the suburbs.)

Sunshine ★★½

There's maybe half a great movie to be found rector Danny Boyle's somber, initially enth sci-fi head-trip. Set 50 years in the futu movie follows a bickering band of astronau ing a treacherous attempt to jumpstart our ing sun. Just as Boyle and screenwriter Ale land synthesized half a century's wo cinematic zombie lore in their terrific 2 Later, Sunshine shoplifts hefty chunks from Solaris, Alien and even Mission to Mars. Mec and methodical, the film's first hour is guished by its chilly, adult tone and th trolled, striking compositions of cinematog Alwin H. Kuchler. But there's a daring con gambit by Boyle that doesn't quite come the mission begins to fall apart, so goes t ture's visual fabric. Thus, as the plausible m tions are replaced by an outlandish killer- house twist, Kuchler's sumptuously slo shots go all herky-jerky handheld, the l spazzing completely out of control alongs spaceship itself, until Sunshine finally c into a deliberately disorienting light-sh Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Superbad ★★★½

2007 is going to go down in history as the that Judd Apatow and Seth Rogen saved A comedy. On the heels of their triumphant Up comes the funniest and most down-t high school movie since Fast Times at R High. Superbad stars the blisteringly profar Hill as a kid whose entire sexual education h from dubious sources on the Internet, while Development's Michael Cera tags along as kick—a gentle young man who doesn't seem figured out how to work his body just yet. It wild night of misadventures as this less- namic duo and their brilliantly squirmy frie (Christopher Mintz-Plasse) attempt to sc liquor and seduce their dreamgirls. The intr constructions devised by Rogen and his wri ner, Evan Goldberg, spin from disasters to and then back again. These characters kee ways to surprise us with improbable, but q uine, pangs of pathos, even as you can't beli you're hearing. (At Boston Common, Fer in the suburbs.)

The Ten ★★

Imagine Krzysztof Kieslowski's The Decal sophomoric, stoner sketch comedy revue, a got The Ten, director David Wain's coll loosely-connected short films based upo Commandments. Enlisting an eclectic ca cludes Winona Ryder, Oliver Platt, Liev S Paul Rudd and Jessica Alba, alongside seve from his old comedy troupes Stella and t Wain cobbles together a hit-and-miss gral misses more often than it hits. Sirens' Call

Two hard-hitting Boston bands break ties and boundaries

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Apparently the sirens said to wear lots of tight, dark clothes and sneakers.

The Receiving End of Sirens has been called "prog-emo" and "screamo" for its high-flying, emotive rock. But the guys from that Boston-born group know that labels just reflect the fact that their music isn't easily summed up.

"It's a natural human instinct to categorize," says singer-bassist Brendan Brown, 23. "We've been called everything from punk to emo to hardcore to metal to indie to electronica. I really don't know how to describe our band. I'd say 'progressive indie' would be the best because we're trying to press boundaries, and we're an independent band."

They are indeed independent, yet the band is popular enough to play Avalon, where TREOS closes a national tour Sept. 15. "There have definitely been tours where people have looked at us like we have two heads," Brown says. "But there are also people who come to shows and say, 'I've never heard anything like it, and I love it.'"

Casey Crescenzo faces similar issues—and to an even greater degree. Dismissed from TREOS last year for personal and creative differences, the singer-guitarist-keyboardist rebounded with the Dear Hunter, a new band that presents odd extremes from string-laced interludes to neo-operatic assaults. Alternative Press magazine broached cross-scene comparisons to Muse, Sufjan Stevens and Panic! at the Disco.

"I respect all of those artists, but it's definitely not where I was coming from," says Crescenzo, 23. "People don't really know. It seems their musical upbringings aren't very vast because of what they jump to compare to [my music]. I've seen it labeled as pop-punk, which just made me laugh, and then a lot of people call it prog, which I think is really funny."

Whatever one calls it, the Dear Hunter's full-length debut, the Meaning Of, & All Things Regarding Ms. Leading, is an artful earful. "I tried to take advantage of the things I grew up with and make as wide a record as I could," says Crescenzo. His father, who plays banjo on the disc, is a producer-engineer, while his mother worked as a studio singer. "Expressing myself musically was never hard," he says. "It's always been like a second language."

For the Dear Hunter, Crescenzo found a kindred spirit in keyboardist Luke Dent as they bonded over their love for Bjork, Faith No More's Mike Patton, the Beatles and the Beach Boys. Drummer/brother Sam Dent, guitarist Erick Serna and new bassist Josh Rheault round out the quintet's lineup.

Lyrically, the CD—the second "act" in a planned six-CD saga—deals with betrayal and redemption and is rooted in the story of a boy who falls for a prostitute without knowing what prostitution is. "It's pretty autobiographical, but it's heavily romanticized," he says, adding, "It's related with my situation in the Receiving End of Sirens.

"I just took it way too far and worked too hard—to the point where I isolated myself mentally and physically from everybody else [in TREOS]," Crescenzo says of balancing his leading role in that band with his solo work. "Until now I've never had an idea of exactly what I really wanted to do. Things were so up in the air in every aspect of my life that [TREOS] was a subconscious detour from what I wanted to do, which I guess is why it ended up not working out."

"We wish him luck, but at that time, it was important that we parted ways with him because it would have cost us the life of the band," says Brown, who now pens all of the lyrics for TREOS. He retains the vocal duties with guitarist Alex Bars, who cofounded the group when the two teenaged friends were roommates at Northeastern.

Of the quintet's new disc, The Earth Sings Mi Fa Mi, Brown says, "Hopefully the contents are a little more transparent because there's less process that the lyrics had to go through." Some songs revolve around impressionistic metaphors befitting a CD named for the 16th-century theory that the Earth produces shifting tones in orbit. Other songs ponder spiritual faith, and one exposes the minefield of life with separated parents.

The Dear Hunter's Casey Crescenzo

Musically, Brown says the group sought to tap more ambient space and dynamics than on its 2005 debut, Between the Heart and the Synapse. Most of the musicians (which now include guitarist-keyboardist Nate Patterson, drummer Andrew Cook and former road manager Brian Southall on guitar) contributed both programming and glockenspiel to broaden the palette.

"The most important thing for us," Brown says, "was to not really think about it too much, to let songs organically and naturally progress." iB

The Receiving End of Sirens plays Avalon Sept. 15.

Miss Kansas,
We run into each other here and have small conversations there. You're smart, you're funny, you're always smiling, you're a hard worker, and it's amazing how you always look so beautiful. People always seem to flock to the 20-somethings around the place, but that extra 10 years makes you so much better. By the way, for the record: The red dress changes it from beautiful to positively stunning. In my mind's eye, I see my arms around you and a kiss that never seems to end. But we've both done the ring thing, so that's that. The Phantom of the Opera said, "Sing for me, Christine!" Know that you are a very desirable woman and all I ask of you is: "Smile for me, Christine!"
—A Quiet Admirer

ere She Was, Justa...

he blonde one walking on Summer et heading toward Downtown sing: Why are you so cute? You a white button-up shirt and the st smile I've ever seen. Me: white eball hat, grey T-shirt and tattoos. uldn't help looking at you from a k away, all the way until we ed. Once we did, I swear that e was for me, but like most guys, always assume that a smile from a utiful girl means you'd actually go with us, when in reality you're being nice. Maybe you could e my year and tell me that the er is not the case and you'd hang with me sometime. If not, you le this shy lonely guy's day with r sexy smile.

es: I'm in a quandary. Why is it after a few cocktails, or too y episodes in a row of Sex and City, we suddenly become the ductor on the love train and de calling the ex—or ALL of the —is a good idea? Or better yet, EXT. I believe that the blame lies completely with the current nology of all cell phones, kBerries and the newest edition Let's make life THAT much harder lean up the morning after," the one. With all of this technology, there a way to install a security em that possibly sends a light trical volt through the keys while aming "Put the phone down! He's sshole!" when certain individuals are brought up in the address book? Because let's be honest—not one of us is going to leave our phone home, and giving it to a girlfriend to hold will be fine until you convince her that you're over him, only to head to the bathroom, text him, erase it from the call log and return like nothing happened. Um... problem. So this is my plea to any individual who can come up with an anti-ex-text program and install this in the latest phones. You would be a millionaire and an icon.

When Fussy Met Scatterbrain

Little Ms. Scatterbrain: When I told you that I wanted to have a great summer with you, I couldn't have imagined that it would be so fun. My trip to Minnesota, your trip to Jamaica, a picnic by the Charles, walks with that adorable miniature sheep dog, the world's greatest summer drinks (JD and sweet iced tea goes down so smoothly), almost ALL of the summer blockbusters (especially Shrek the Third), pink boxer briefs, your "naps" at midnight, finding a place to sit at the Enormous Room, Beyonce's "Check on It"; and, and, AND my new crib! True—we still need to find an endodontist for you and look into that BC, but I guess that's what fall is for. Thank you. I love you. See you in Hawaii!
—Little Mr. Fussy

The Dreaded 7-10 Split

To the attractive guy at Jamaica Pond who said "Que tal?" to me Aug. 19: You were walking with two friends and a small dog, while I was talking to my friend and her boyfriend next to the lake; after walking for the second time next to us, you looked at me and I looked at you. I should have said something and I regret it, but I've learned that gay guys in Boston are a seven looking for a 10. I hope you aren't one of them, so I'll just write this. If you remember me, send me an e-mail; I'm so sorry to be a chickenshit and not talk to you, but I'd rather you made the first move. I'm not a 10, I'm just a normal and interesting guy: not a Kate Moss bulimic look-alike that goes to Club Cafe, but a 10 in bed. When I saw you walk by, I should have tried to say hi, but to be honest, your two friends made me feel shy.
—Good in Bed

Just Chase Me, Dammit

Dear R: Roughly two dozen men have chased me around in the past three months. I don't think I'm anything special, but apparently they do. You, on the other hand—the only one I want—have no interest in me. We have only spoken a few times. I barely know you, but I'm infatuated. I have watched you perform, and it's perfect. Your visage makes me dream of dancing with you, blasting music as loud as possible, or simply skipping town back to your jungle-laden country. Your female friend is hot, but banal and trivial competition. Either way, we are distended—our circles are too tightly knit by others in our small "scene"... and, oh yeah—learn some damn English.
—Waiting and/or willing to teach, A.

Tonia Egan vacationed in Moorea, Tahiti. Much to our surprise, Moorea was founded by the Moops, not the Moors.

Aida Rivera, John Wasilunas, Natalia Pastrana and Eric Gosselin visited Costa Rica's Arenal Volcano, which has minor eruptions every five to 10 minutes—just like Naomi Campbell.

Phillip Taylor recently traveled to Russia and snapped this shot in Moscow's Red Square. Today's Moscow forecast: Slightly overcast, with a 100 percent chance of big fluffy hats.

Laura Shelton checked out Hawaii's Kauai Marriott. The sign is missing one stipulation: If the coconut has a big bite taken out of it... Kirstie Alley is visiting the island.

Rich Becker and Chris LaPierre stopped by Berlin's Brandenburg Gate, which for some ridiculous reason is actually named after the dog from Punky Brewster.

Brenda Tangney and Jessica Martin were in San Pedro de Atacama, Chile, where they n the country's penguin mascot, Chile Willie.

NUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

urn's exit out of Leo, the sign of your significant others, uld free you from the more stringent restrictions the old insisted that your partnership endure, especially while planet opposed idealistic Neptune in your sign off and or the past 12 months. It may take a while to notice a or change (Saturn moves slowly), but you could get a of what lies in store after the Virgo-Pisces full moon pse draws your attention to a financial matter you /or your mate have not adequately addressed.

ISCES

BRUARY 19–MARCH 19

le the Fish a full moon to call their own and they'll want ther, even if it's a total lunar eclipse. Because of the pse, there's a chance that along with fluctuating moods, 'll feel underappreciated or unfulfilled. Submerged otions can rise like the tide during this event, so you're liable to have plenty of "stuff" to deal with and, since the sun and Mercury are in your Virgo house of partners, there'll be astute people to talk it over with. Don't take their opinions too much to heart.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

You didn't wake up one morning and decide to become argumentative. You're simply reacting to your Mars ruler as it makes its way through rational, communicative Gemini. But if you're suddenly able to see both sides of an issue, blame the dual nature of the Twins. While you're at it, try signing checks with the other hand; ambidextrous is another Gemini asset, as is counterfeiting. If ever you wanted to break out of a mold of your own making, to fly a bit higher (without creating a firestorm in your wake), this would be a good time to make your move.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Are you rewinding the history of a relationship back to the point where it first became ambiguous? Although fresh opportunities may present themselves, the further into your Virgo house of romance and risk the planets progress, the deeper into the past you're likely to delve. After your Venus ruler comes out of retrograde on Sept. 8, you should have a better understanding of why you've invested so much passion, and possibly money, in this matter. Best of all, you'll have a chance to do it again, but with a clearer head and an unfettered heart.

GEMINI

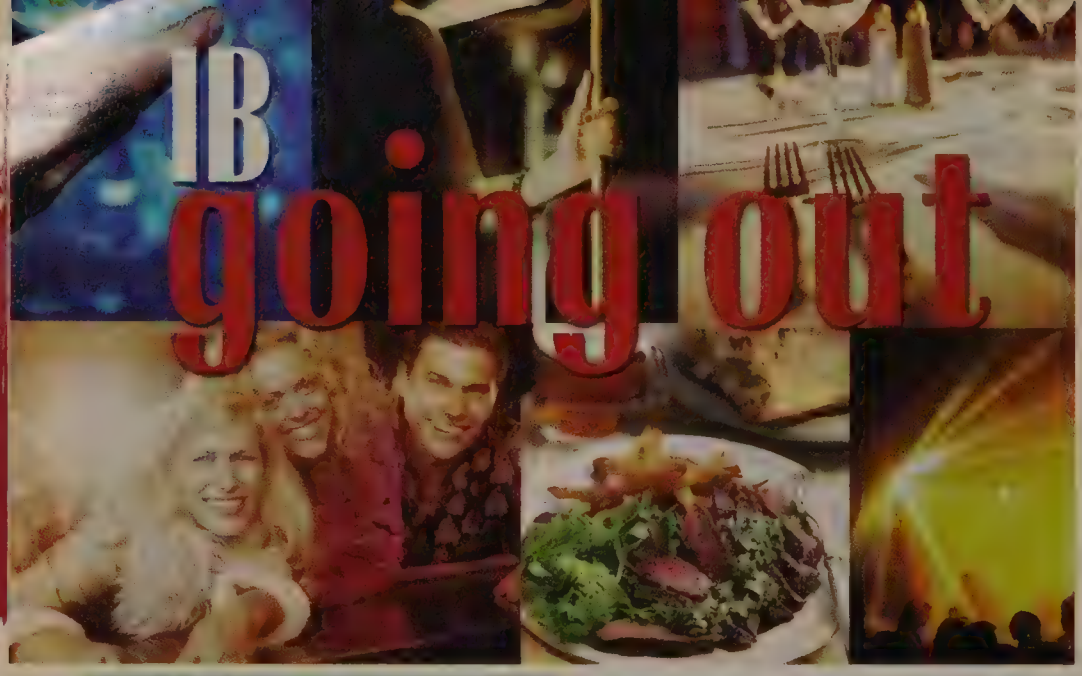
MAY 21–JUNE 20

The Pisces full moon may shed some light on vague notions about becoming a better you. Whatever that entails—e.g., obtaining another degree, spending time traveling or doing charity work—may seem more important this week than it has in a long time. A moment of clarity, bordering on brilliance, could strike when your Mercury ruler confronts barrier-breaking Uranus, so be sure to pay attention to the random thoughts that cross your mind. They're a precursor of things to come, and sooner than you think.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Every full moon strikes a different chord with a Moon Child; however, when the lunation occurs in Pisces, a simpatico water sign like your own, you could become aware that a stronger alliance is being forged. With whom and over what depends on the resources—emotional, financial and physical—that are shared. Also note that your values may be shifting; what was important around your birthday doesn't carry the same weight today. Long-range plans remain the same, but the path is no longer carved in stone.



LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Shaking loose the ties that bind? Still pursuing respectability? As of Labor Day, Lions may be set free from the limitations Saturn has placed on you during the past two and a half years. And while the planet of crystallization might not relax its grip on your shoulders just yet, it soon will. Saturn's transit through discerning Virgo will focus on your assets, talents and sense of values. If ever you thought, "One day I'll get serious about financial planning," get ready; that day is fast approaching.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Montecristo Cup, clockwise from bottom left: Francesca Orsini and Bob Johnston; Robin Sears and Emer Willett; Doo and Holly Little; Lauren and Marlene Pippins

IF ONLY MANOLO MADE A SENSIBLE BROGUE...

It was a Ralph Lauren ad come to life when the North Shore horsey set showed up in their Range Rovers, Mercedes and classic cars, sporting their preppiest frippery, for the Myopia Hunt Club's Montecristo Cup.

The polo match, sponsored by the cigar-maker, pitted the Dow 19,000 against the Pony Express in a contest that spectators paid intermittent attention to, in between nibbling delicious finger food, puffing cigars and schmoozing about this and that.

Present and accounted for: dashing high-goaler Doo Little and the delectable Holly, polo stalwarts Alison and Haskell Crocker and Dan and Robin Sears, financial titan Bob Johnston (driving a cream-colored 1964 Plus-4 Morgan convertible) and the soignée Francesca Orsini, yummy mummy Marlene Pippins and her darling daughters, equestrian/neurosurgeon Thor vad Norregaard with hat-wearing babes Julia Coffey and Jessica Kennedy, tobacconist to the stars Stephen Willett with his stunning Irish wife, Emer, VIP area fixture Chad Perbeck and banking behemoth Devin Hill (whose name comes up as "Devil Hell" in spellcheck), there to cheer on their boss, Bill Coke (captain of the Dow 19,000), a few men in go-to-hell pants, one woman who said, "My eyes are bloodshot from last night, so the sunglasses are staying on," and another who was wearing spandex shorts, a cropped top and cowboy boots, which elicited a succinct critique from a self-deputized member of the fashion police: "All I can say is, 'Ouch.'"

Conversation tended toward exchanges like, "We gave 'em a run for their money," to which someone responded, "I'll bet that turned out to be a hell of a lot of money," and everyone from the most dedicated polo enthusiast to the most disinterested bystander seemed to enjoy the afternoon, although when the time came to replace divots in between chukkers, one woman said, "In these shoes? I don't think so!"

WHEN YOU'RE COOL, THE SUN ALWAYS SHINES....

In what was undoubtedly one of the sexiest soirées of the summer. Harvard Square hot spot Om (which was named one of the grooviest places in Cambridge by some glossy magazine) celebrated the opening of its outdoor patio with an evening of midsummer madness reminiscent of a night at the swankiest club in Miami.

The young and the guestlist were out in full force, among them: publicity-shy jeweler to the stars Nidhi Handa, Eleven Photography hipster Randy Gross with the improbably good-looking Jeff Guillen, blonde babe Catherine Ferrigno with self-deprecating hottie Donnie Dixon, the one-named phenom Harry and nightlife impresarios Charlie Levine and Sergio Santos of Marz Entertainment, übe groover Eli Goldstein, arts booster E rique Florio, Joseph "Horseboy" Ru (don't ask) and budding real estate tit James Riel, Peroni rep Gianni Mazzott the fabulously attractive Joanna Bla with Andrew Griffes, and one guest w said to a woman, "I love your dress," which she replied, "It's actually a shirt, b I'm short enough to make it work."

Then there was the man who said, have a date tonight with a woman wh actually older than 18," which prompte jaundiced friend to say, "So you don't ha to meet her at Chuck E. Cheese?"

That said, it was an incredibly urba and attractive crowd, and the new spa proved to be a big hit. As one attendee d scribed it (stealing a line from Somers Maugham), "It's a sunny place for sha people," to which someone else responde "I'm just grateful that there's finally som place I can wear sunglasses at night wit out feeling like a jackass." ABUNDANT ARTS

In fall, there's nowhere better to be than New England. As all the lovely colors come to life outside, one of the country's best arts scenes gains momentum on Boston stages and in its museums. In fact, there's so much going on that you might not see the forest for the trees.

Let our supersized fall arts guide lead you to cultural clarity. For every day from Sept. 12 through fall's end on Dec. 21, we've singled out a performance, event or show worth your time. So when you feel the need to feed your soul with some music, theater, dance, art or literature (or even some lowbrow TV), you know where to turn.

Along the same theme, we also take a look at young-member groups you can join at many of Boston's arts institutions. And we challenge museum curators to show us their best stuff in 15 minutes—their superfast tours will wow you.

TELL US HOW YOU REALLY FEEL

Every so often I have the (dis)pleasure of flipping through your magazine. For the most part I find the articles mundane, dumbed down and vapid. I'm feeling that Salon.com offers a better and more concealable way to waste time (God bless tabbed browsing).

That said, I'm always happy to look at the horribly shot "come together" pictures of pseudo-important Bostonians. Fake tans, harsh lighting, boob jobs, booze-influenced smiles and fat guys sporting trophy wives always make me feel better about myself. Please expand this section!

Also, it's probably a good idea to leave out columns like "Ezra." I'd be much happier to see an ad for a spa/salon/yoga place/bad music event/subpar pizza place. At least there's profit in that.

MOVE IS IN THE HEART

I read Jonathan Soroff's article about moving ("A Moving Story," Aug. 15), and I definitely feel his pain. He did a great job describing it! At least Soroff didn't have to deal with roommates bickering over who got to take what home at the end of the year. I hope he settles happily into his new abode.

MOOO IN TOWN

Prime Time

The intersection of Beacon and Tremont has become the city's official meating place—a compass point for the carnivorous to feast on anything that once clucked, oinked, bleated or mooed.

To the north is the Carving Station. To the west, Ruth's Chris, and due south there's KO Prime. Finally, to the east lies Mooo, the latest venture from the Commonwealth Restaurant Group, operators of Mistral, Sorrelina and Teatro. As the new residents of what was previously the Federalist, CRG has two objectives: Cut away the formality that marked the Fed, and put its prime stamp on the Boston meat market.

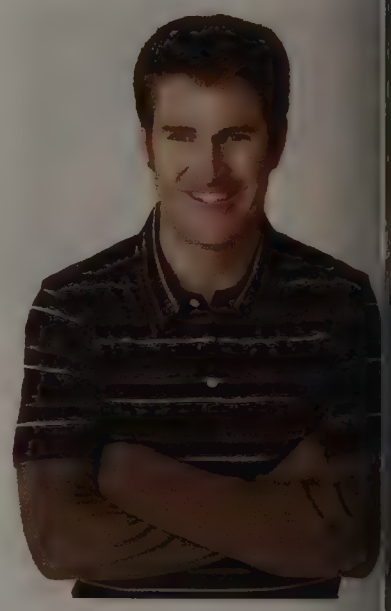
As to the former, the onomatopoeic name switch certainly helps loosen the collar a bit. "I mean, the Federalist—just the name alone is serious," notes general manager Alec Riveros.

The changes in décor reflect the conversion as well. Tables in the open and uncluttered dining room have strikingly tall, earthtone-upholstered chairs, and the bar area has a courtyard feel, with a cobblestone floor and huge amber fixtures glowing overhead. Rather than keeping the clientele corralled, the wall that once separated the bar from the dining room has been replaced with a resin partition to allow the gusto to circulate unimpeded.

All that energy calls for youth, and while it's shooting for a mixed crowd, Mooo definitely has the yuppies in its sights. "It's for a younger demographic than who was coming to the Fed," says Riveros. "It is upscale, but it's not formal—there are no tablecloths."

As for the menu, rather than staying penned up in tradition or trying to reinvent the wheel, the chefs have tweaked the old favorites. "I don't want to be a chef at a steakhouse," says executive chef David Hutton. "So we have fun with the theme and come up with some cool dishes."

At the core, under the simple heading "Red Meats," you'll find basics like filet ($48), sirloin ($39) and porterhouse ($48), as well as a true six-ounce Kobe sirloin, imported from Japan and, at $130, not for the meek of wallet. Non-beef options include some standards, as well as a skillet-roasted cornish game hen ($24), wiener schnitzel ($28) and grilled corvina "Mediterranean Style" ($39).



Following steakhouse tradition, sides come à la carte here, and Mooo's 14 options ($5–$14) include truffled parmesan fries, mushroom risotto, and potato gratin with gruyere cheese and creamy leeks. The big hit with visiting chefs? Pork belly and beans with maple brown sugar ($5–$9). Even the most discerning palate can be won over with bacon. Mooo, 15 Beacon St., Boston (617-670-2515). www.mooorestaurant.com.

Born and raised in Hooksett, N.H., comedian Jamie Kaler made guest appearances on shows like Friends, Will & Grace and 3rd Rock From the Sun early in his TV career. In 2006, he earned one of the starring roles in the TBS sitcom My Boys, which is currently finishing up its second season on the air. Keller appears at the Comedy Connecti in Faneuil Hall Marketplace Sept. 21 and 22.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Being from New Hampshire, you've probably spent a decent amount of time here in Boston. What do you love most about the city?
Jamie Kaler: I actually went to college in Boston too, BU, so it's always great to be back. I love the fall in t city. Just walking around the Back Bay and Newbu Street. Plus there's all the history. You can have a drink a pub from the 1700s.
IB: And we hope you're a Red Sox fan...
JK: Huge. I'm actually watching last night's highlights o SportsCenter right now. I always try and catch a gam when they're out west. This year I went to San Dieg and Arizona for games.
IB: With My Boys already back for a second year, do you start to feel comfortable? Or is that dangerous in the craz TV world?
JK: To be honest, you can't help but get comfortabl After doing only one-week appearances at a time for s long, it's nice to be able to keep coming back. We haven heard yet if we'll be back in January, but ratings have bee good, so we're hoping for the best.
IB: We read that you were in the Navy. So if the show doesn't work out, we bet you'd have a leg up if they ever made Down Periscope 2*?*
JK: [Laughs.] That sounds great. We could write it righ now. You and me. It would be easy.

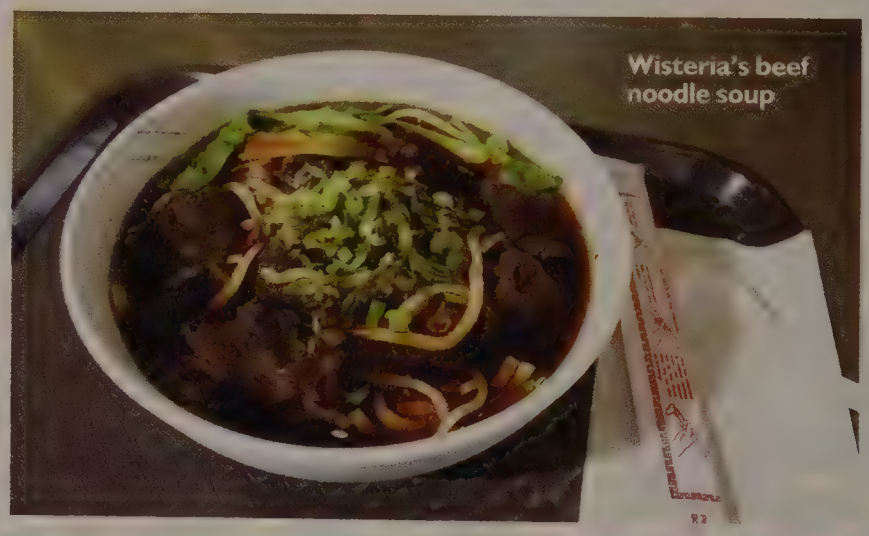
STIX skewers



Pick Up Stix… Last winter, we reported that the folks over at 33 Restaurant had purchased the space next door to their Stanhope Street digs (which formerly housed Bomboa) and were planning to unveil a new venture. STIX is slated to open this month, and its name defines the cuisine. Nearly 80 percent of the eatery's fare will be served on flavor-infused skewers—the grilled kobe sirloin on a rosemary garlic skewer with garlic potato dip looked especially inviting—while the rest of the menu features more traditional entrées, including a grilled langoustine and braised pork. 35 Stanhope St., Boston (617-456-7849).

Commonwealth Restaurant Group—the team behind local successes Mistral and Sorrelina, and newcomer Mooo—we feel duty-bound to let you know. L'Andana, which opened on Cambridge Street in Burlington this month, seats nearly 300 diners, offers a full bar and features Tuscan food courtesy of chef David Blessing—formerly of Aujourd'hui and the Bristol Lounge. 86 Cambridge St., Burlington (781-270-0100). www.landanagrill.com.

State of Wisteria… Fans of Wisteria House were caught off guard in early August when the Taiwanese favorite abruptly closed down its Newbury Street spot. But Wisteria isn't really gone, as its owners have two new locations lined up to replace the Newbury joint. The first opened Sept. 1 at 1095 Comm. Ave. in Allston (inside the Super 88 food court). Look for the second later this fall at 569 Cambridge St. in East Cambridge—the space that was once home to both Bo Bo Café and Tao Garden.

Shout-out to Suburbia… We don't usually go out of our way to point out a new dining option in Burlington, but when said option comes from the

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTIO

Citgo Is the New Hollywood Sign… Ironically, the success of The Departed may have ushered in a plethora of projects, as mid-August saw two movies begin shooting in the city. Bachelor No. 2, a romantic comedy starring Kate Hudson and Arlington's Dane Cook, has been filming in East Boston, the Back Bay and the South End, with one scene taking place at Tremont Street hot spot the Beehive. The Women, which includes Jada Pinkett Smith, Eva Mendes and Brandeis grad Debra Messing, has also been on location in Boston. Though the film is set in NYC, all but one day of the two-month shoot will take place here. Scenic superiority aside, Mayor Menino's new tax breaks have made our city attractive to filmmakers. Bachelor No. 2 location manager Greg Chiodo sees more projects on the horizon, adding, "People are definitely testing the water and taking advantage of [the program]." Which means that in addition to these two films—plus Ben Affleck's Gone Baby Gone, the Rock's The Game Plan and Kevin Spacey's 21—you could be seeing a whole lot more of the Bean on the silver screen.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

DON'T BE A CARD

Hallmark, does somebody need a hug? I'm here for you.

I avoid going to the doctor as long as I can, but eventually I have to look myself in the bloodshot, crusty eyes and admit I have conjunctivitis. Yes, I am a dirty little kid, with snot running down my nose and head lice and the granddaddy of contagious gross-kid ailments: pink eye. I need to see the doctor and get a prescription. And maybe while I'm there, I should have the lab run some tests for cooties.

This is why I'm sitting in a small room on a paper-covered table reading the May 2007 edition of O, the Oprah Magazine. I've been waiting for the doctor for almost an hour, and I'm on my second reading of Doctor Phil's column when I spy an intriguing ad from Hallmark. The ad depicts a wedding photo, with annotations over several of the people that read things like "just divorced and trying to seem OK with it," and "sober for 365 days, seven minutes and counting." At the bottom of the page is a tagline for the new Journeys line of cards. It says, "Welcome to the new normal."

I can't believe it—a line of cynical Hallmark cards? This I have to see, so when I get home I go to the Hallmark Web site and find out what these Journeys cards are all about. With a slogan like "Welcome to the new normal," I imagine this is the first line of greeting cards that tells it like it is. I imagine that instead of proffering syrupy sentiments like "Every storm gives way to sunshine," they'd say things like "Divorce is tough, but you know what isn't? Sex with different people!"

Of course, this is Hallmark we're talking about. And even when Hallmark decides to tackle a tough issue, it goes about it in a circuitous, vague and hokey way. For instance, consider this message: "Hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart. Never underestimate the power of two. I'm here for you now and always." That card appears under the headings of both "On a diet" and "Coming out." So if you know someone's who's fat and in the closet, you could potentially save a few bucks and just buy one card.

The "Totally stressed out" lineup includes further treacle. Example: "Ever have one of those days when everything seems to go right… me neither!" Wow, Hallmark, you really speak to the essence of my angst with that one. How about, "You know those people who feed pigeons and cause them to swarm around you with their dirty beaks and wings and feathers when you're just trying to walk through the park? Wouldn't you like to throw bread on those people and see them get pecked to death? I'd buy that card.

I prefer the cards that are blank inside since they give you some leeway to create your own message. On the cover of one such card is a photo of smooth pebbles with the caption, "The most beautiful stones have been tossed by the wind and washed by the water and polished to brilliance by life's strongest storms." On the inside, you could write, "Except kidney stones. Those, you're gonna have to get removed." Or simply, "You rock!"

Hallmark also includes a form on their Web site where you can post your sob story, and they'll suggest a card for you. It's like an online version of those

A LINE OF CYNICAL HALLMARK CARDS? THIS I HAVE TO SEE.

Kleenex ads where people sit on a couch in the street and bawl their eyes out while telling a strange man how their mother never loved them. One such tale begins, "At church I wasn't there 30 minutes when I began feeling sick. You see, I am allergic to perfume…." (And in case you were wondering, it seems that there isn't a particular card that deals with allergic reactions to Issey Miyake in a house of worship.)

I guess my problem with the whole Journeys series is that I consider greeting cards the lowest form of human discourse. I pretty much buy only birthday cards, and only then if they have a monkey on them or some sort of pop-up naked lady inside. When you're dealing with issues as heavy as those that Journeys takes on—illness, divorce—then leaning on a Hallmark goon to sum up your feelings is trite and insulting.

That's why I'm writing my own get-well card for myself. On the inside it'll say, "Sorry you've got to wear glasses for a few days. At least when the doctor asked you if you had discharges anywhere other than your eyes—hint, hint!—you were able to say 'no' with reasonable certainty. Go you!" For the cover, I think I'm gonna go with a monkey. iB

WELCOME TO THE IMPROPER SCHOOL OF SPORTS

5 Questions for Josh Beckett

Improper Bostonian: Tell us a little more about the Beckett Bowl on Sept. 13 (see "Agenda" on page 49) and the Josh Beckett Foundation in general.

Josh Beckett: The foundation means giving back to the community and those who support me on and off the field. All the proceeds from the bowling tournament will be going to Children's Hospital Boston's cancer facility. Our goal is to name at least a room or wing of the hospital after the foundation and leave a lasting impact on the lives of the kids who find themselves at this facility.

IB: Do you have a favorite bowling movie? Maybe Kingpin or The Big Lebowski*?*

JB: Oh boy. I've seen them both. Kingpin is definitely better than The Big Lebowski. That's a great movie, with some great lines.

IB: One of our favorite parts of Clay Buchholz's no-hitter the other night was the camera picking up your "He did better than Curt Schilling!" taunt. Does Curt's outspokenness make him a fun target for trash talking? And how's it been playing with him the past two seasons?

JB: It was completely clubhouse banter. Curt Schilling is one of the greatest pitchers to play this game. Schill's definitely helped me become a better pitcher.

IB: Mike Lowell was essentially a throw-in, in the trade that brought you to Boston two years ago, but he just might be the team's MVP this year: What can you say about him?

JB: Mike Lowell's one of the best players I've ever played with. He's so smart and doesn't make mistakes.

IB: If you had a vote for Rookie of the Year, who'd it go to: Dustin Pedroia or Hideki Okajima?

JB: It'd be Dustin Pedroia. He plays the game right.

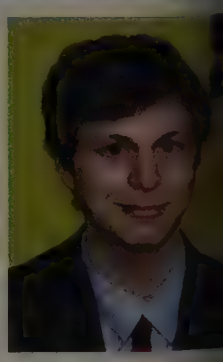
4 Sox MVPs

1 Whether it's on the field, at the plate or in the clubhouse, Mike Lowell couldn't be more essential to the Sox' fortunes this year. Our only worry now is that his wild success might make him worth more than the Sox are willing to pay.

2 Jonathan Papelbon is the Tom Brady of the Sox—it's impossibl to have any less than 100 percent confidence in him, no matter the situation.

3 The Sox haven't had a true stopper in the rotation since Pedro left. While Josh Beckett is still a few dominating seasons—and jeri curls—away from being Petey, he proved this year that he's ready to be Boston's next ace.

4 If there's anything that years of watching the likes of Heathcliff Slocumb, BK Kim and (cough) Eric Gagne have taught us, it's to respect quality relief pitchin and Hideki Okajima couldn't be better. Not to mention, he's responsible for 50 percent of our favorite photo of the year.



3 Pats Fears

1 Richard Seymour: This injury scares us. A lot. Like a photo of Abe Vigoda bending over in the shower. We'll be very content if he's even ready by Week 7.

2 Rodney Harrison: We think we know what it's like to be a San Francisco Giants fan now, because Harrison tested positive for HGH and we really don't respect him any less. We are, however, terrified of the effect his four-game absence will have.

3 Beli-Tract: Speculation started last season that this would be Belichick's final year in Foxborough, and you can bet that someone in the media—Shaughnessy's our guess—will resurrect this story after a bad loss or during the slow bye week. We couldn't be less excited.

2 Guys Separated at Birth?

CLAY BUCHHOLZ & MICHAEL CERA

We've watched nearly 1,000 innings of Red Sox baseball this year, but none were more satisfying than the nine Buchholz hurled on Sept. 1. Seriously, it was special. Also special was Clay's spot-on postgame impression of the tall kid from Superbad. Whether it was his embarrassed smile, general look of overwhelmedness or the awkwar on-field interaction with Tina Cervasio (we think we even heard a "samesies" in there), Buchholz straight channeled Michael Cera, making the nig that much more entertaining.

1 Night You Better Be Near a TV...

Sept. 16: At 8:05 pm on ESPN, the Sox host the Yankees for the 19th and final time this (regular) season, and at 8:15 pm on NBC, Sunday Night Football's in Foxborough as the Pats take on LT and the Chargers in the 2007 home opener. The story lines are endless, but only one thing's for sure: There are going to be a lot of hangovers walking around Boston on the morning of Sept. 17.

Soroff ON

AMIRI BARAKA

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Poet/playwright Amiri Baraka is being honored by the Tennessee Williams Festival in Provincetown, which takes place Sept. 27-30. Born in Newark, N.J., in 1934, he's the author of more than 40 books of essays, poems, drama, and music history and criticism (among them the 1963 play Dutchman) but is equally well-known as a revolutionary political activist. As a young writer, he founded the Black Arts Movement in Harlem in the 1960s, and as the former poet laureate of New Jersey, he was fired from the post for writing a poem, "Somebody Blew Up America," that questioned who knew beforehand about the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. He heads up the world music ensemble Blue Ark: The Word Ship, and codirects Kimako's Blues People, the art theater housed in his basement for the past 15 years. He has taught at Yale, Columbia and SUNY Stonybrook, and among his awards and honors are an Obie, the American Academy of Arts and Letters award, and grants from the Rockefeller Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts. He lives in Newark with his wife, the poet Amina, with whom he has five children.

Jonathan Soroff: Who's the most impressive academic or polymath you've ever known?

Amiri Baraka: I'd say probably W.E.B. DuBois.

JS: Don't you think you should be Barack Obama's running mate, just so we could have bumper stickers that said "Barack Obama/ Amiri Baraka"?

AB: I think the smartest trick would be to run Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama, but they're too frightened to do that. They're frightened of blacks, of course, and they're frightened of women. But that might be the slickest kind of curveball to throw.

JS: What do you think is the worst example of oppression in the world today?

AB: What Bush is doing to the people in the Middle East, whether it's Afghanistan or Palestine or Iraq or Lebanon or North Korea. I think the Axis of Evil is really in Washington, D.C.

JS: What do you think are the current offspring of the Black Arts Movement you started in the '60s?

AB: Well, I'd have to go case by case, but there are people I recognize as upholding the general principles: the fact that we wanted to create a literature that was black by form and content and feeling and culture, a literature with mass appeal and one that would transform the world—we wanted a revolutionary art. We were Malcolm X's children, and I still see a lot of young poets who seem to take up those kind of charges.

JS: Like who? Would you consider any of the rap artists as rightful heirs?

AB: Rap's like anything else. There's the few that are progressive, the few that are extremely backward and then the majority are just in the middle, neither this nor that. The majority of anything is mediocre. But there's some good young people. My son did an album with Lauryn Hill called Shorty for Mayor. Then there's Nas, Mos Def, and some lesser-known names that are doing great stuff.

"CASTRO'S BEEN ABLE TO INFLUENCE LATIN AMERICAN THOUGHT GENERALLY, AND I ADMIRE THAT."

JS: In terms of writing, what's harder for you: plot or dialogue?

AB: I find dialogue easier because one of the functions of any writer is to listen. On the other hand, plot's more complex. I'm writing a novel right now, and it's a little more difficult to make up lives for them. You actually hear people talking all the time, so you can kind of judge what sounds like real talk.

JS: Your last word on the whole scandal surrounding your poem about Sept. 11?

AB: What do I think? It's a scam to protect Israel. People call me anti-Semitic just because I question Israel? That's completely out to lunch. You can't criticize them? Why? And I was just questioning what I had read in a number of newspapers, including some Israeli ones like Haaretz.

JS: Well, I'm a Jew, and I'd like to think that I question Israel's foreign policy.

AB: Then you're in trouble, because it's not OK to ask questions when it comes to Israel. They jump on anybody who does. Why are we giving money to theocratic states like Saudi Arabia, so that they can oppress other people? All those people involved in 9/11, except four or five, were Saudi. So how do you let them slip through your fingers, and Osama bin Laden's family is flown out of here in the middle of the night, and then you invade Iraq, which is the only secular state in the region? The hypocrisy and contradictions are just amazing.

JS: You know the rap song "Bush Blew Up the Towers"? Any thoughts?

AB: It's clear to me. I was at an anti-war demonstration the other day, several thousand people, and there were signs that said "9/11 was an inside job." I've always thought that, if not by commission then by omission, because they were forewarned by everyone, from Israel to Germany to England and France. We knew we had armed the Taliban. It was American money that put the weapons in their hands when there was a common enemy in the Soviets.

JS: Who's your personal hero?

AB: Well, in the 20th century, there are two: Malcolm X and Fidel Castro. Malcolm for obvious reasons: He called for self-determination, self-respect, self-defense. And Castro because he's been able to defy the United States for 40-some years. He's been able to influence Latin American thought generally, and I admire that.

JS: If you were going to be stranded on a desert island, what three jazz albums would you bring?

AB: [Laughs.] Something by Duke Ellington, a Thelonious Monk album and a Coltrane album.

JS: No Coleman Hawkins?

AB: No, I'm younger than that. But I would take the Monk album that has Coleman playing on it.

JS: Ever meet Oprah?

AB: Yeah, when Toni Morrison won the Nobel Prize, they had a party at Maya Angelou's house. I talked to her for five or 10 minutes.

JS: Out of rap, hip-hop and reggae, which do you listen to the most?

AB: Well, I listen to jazz most of the ti but of the three that you mentioned, have to say reggae. Bob Marley.

JS: Favorite poet of all time?

AB: I guess Langston Hughes, to tell the truth.

JS: OK, if every rap artist uses the n-word why can't white people?

AB: First of all, I don't think it's a wor choice anymore for anybody. I use it writing at times, because it's appropriat the specific situation, but I think peop consciousness has been raised to the po where they don't want to hear it anym As for white people in particular using it's belittling, it's insulting…

JS: Well, what if it's used affectionately or morously, the way I might say to another g person, "Hey, faggot," as a term of endear ment? Or is it unacceptable no matter wha

AB: Yeah, I think so. Black people star using it in the '60s as sort of a vaccinat against it. No one could really hurt yo you took the sting out of it yourself. then after a while, you get to anot threshold of rationalization and say, "N don't want to hear it at all."

JS: Is there an award that you think you de serve that you don't have?

AB: Yes, the award called M-O-N-E-Y.

JS: I guess being poet laureate doesn't pay well?

AB: [Laughs.] It doesn't pay at all. In fac have two lawsuits going and we made plication to go before the Supreme Cou don't know that they'll hear it, but at le we made application.

JS: Moment in history you would most like have witnessed?

AB: A lot. Maybe the first liberation some sense, like the freeing of W.E DuBois back when he was accused a acquitted of being an agent of a fore power. That was the first victory o McCarthyism, you know. So, someth like that.

JS: Last question: One thing that people would be shocked to learn about you?

AB: That I'm right about the origins a the actual perpetrators of 9/11. Either th or to find out how broke I am. IB

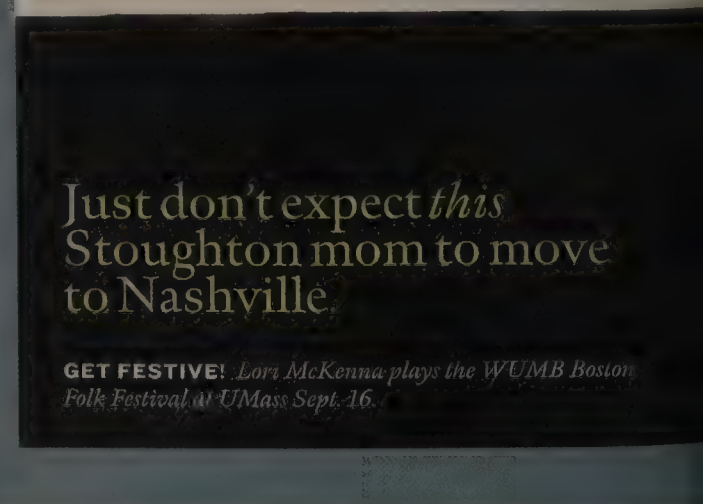
SMALL TOWN SUCCESS

LORI MCKENNA GOES BIG



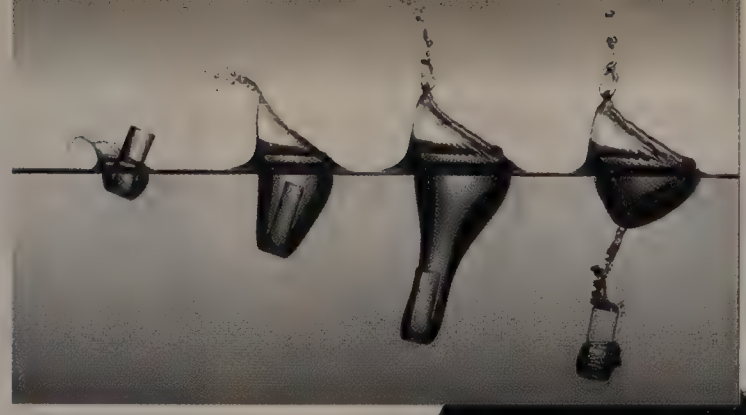
"MY HUSBAND doesn't know the stress involved in this," Lori McKenna says. "He thinks it's a hobby that worked out."

The Stoughton singer-songwriter is halfway through a photo shoot—and clearly uncomfortable in that glamorous role. "I'm getting better at it, but it's one of those things," she says after posing for the IMPROPER. It's also one of those things that comes from having country superstar Faith Hill record three of your songs for her 2-million-selling disc Fireflies, bring you on Oprah and harmonize on your major-label debut. That CD, coproduced by Hill's partner Tim McGraw, coincidently bears the name Unglamorous, after a bouncy tune about a more familiar, no-frills home life.

"People ask me about my expectations for success, and I honestly feel like [Unglamorous] was successful even before it came out," says McKenna, 38. "We're all proud of it."

The Nashville session players who buoy McKenna through the polished disc were a change of pace for the mother of five, who first tested the local folk circuit at age 27. But her wise songs about small-town domestic life still resonate in ways that should easily return to a sparse setting when she performs Sept. 16 at the Boston Folk Festival, swapping songs in a round with Mark Erelli (a member of her trio on a summer arena tour with McGraw and Hill) and Catie Curtis.

"I still only hear me sitting in the kitchen with the song," McKenna says. "I never hear the other things. So I'm used to letting other people fill in those gaps for me."



Kerry Brett

In turn, her lyrics about faltering relationships can fill a range of stylistic molds. "Folk music gets to be country music if you produce it a certain way," she says. "At the core, people like country music because they can identify with it, and that's what people love about folk music, too."

Just don't expect the Stoughton mom to move to Nashville. She and husband Gene, a plumber for Bay State Gas, recently moved the family out of the home they bought when they were 19, cashing in on equity and song royalties. "We were just about busting out of that house, so we did move about half a mile up the street to a house we could fit in," she says, adding of the hobby that worked out, "It's not one of those things where someone can quit their job and live in the lap of luxury, but for us, it took a lot of the pressure off." —Paul Robicheau

YOUNG and CULTURED

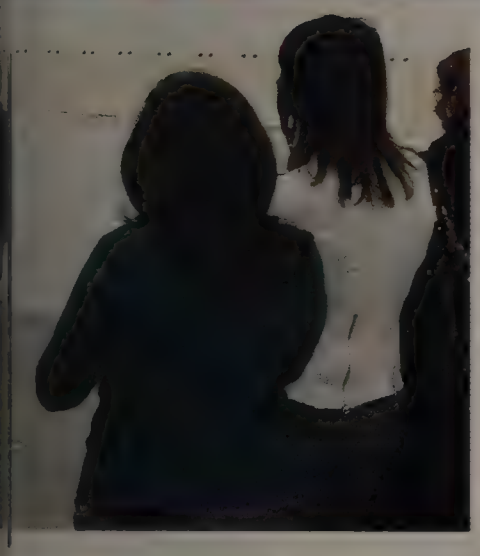
BOSTON'S ARTS ORGANIZATIONS ARE COURTING THE UNDER-40 SET IN A BIG WAY

By KIMBERLEY JONES

WHEN IT COMES to appreciation for the arts, cultural institutions have got a captive audience on both ends of the age spectrum: Kids come through on field trips and family outings; empty nesters have time and money to burn. It's that in-between crowd, specifically 20- to 40-somethings, that can be harder to capture. Young professionals have busy schedules and plenty of other social activities competing for their time—not to mention limited funds, with student loans, down payments and the occasional hot date making demands on the cash flow.

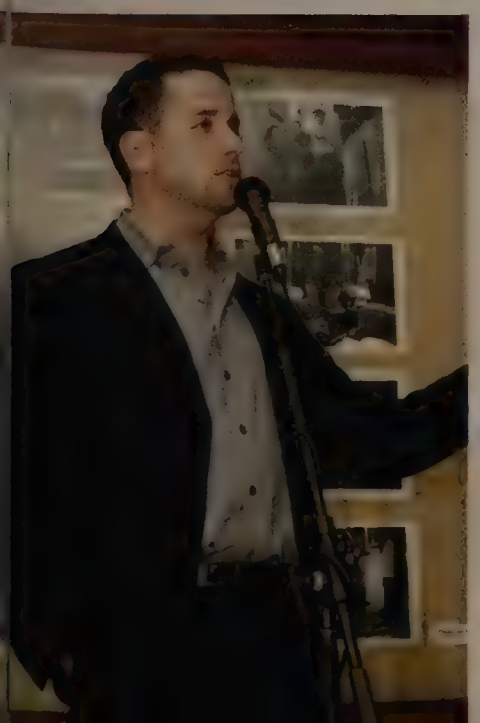
Which is why museums, theaters and other cultural organizations are gearing special programs to greener audiences. Suzan Redgate, executive director of the Copley Society, says it's important for organizations like hers to "remove any obvious barriers for young people interested in enjoying art and investing in it, emotionally and mentally." The hope among Redgate and her counterparts is that these adults will be drawn not just to the arts but to the institutions that serve them, eventually becoming board members, trustees and donors, and helping to ensure their longevity.

Catherine Peterson, executive director of the nonprofit group ArtsBoston, believes that the number of cultural offerings tailored to young professionals is continuing to grow in the Boston area. "This is a trend that's on the uptick," says Peterson. "It started with our larger institutions—the symphony and the MFA—but what's been great is that our midsize groups have been able to take it and customize it," making it work for their own audiences.



Young member groups make it easier and more enticing for yuppies to try things like the opera—as well as meet new people. With affordable, enjoyable events, you have no excuse not to get some culture. Here are some local options to check out.

"Many people think contemporary art is just paintings or photographs that hang on walls, but it's also about music and dance and multimedia and a whole spectrum of things," says ICA New Group member Suzanne Logan.



FANS OF BOSTON'S ART SCENE INCLUDE AN INCREASING COTERIE OF YOUNG PROFESSIONALS DRAWN TO THE PARTIES, PREVIEWS AND OTHER SOCIAL EVENTS.

Bravo Bohème

Boston Lyric Opera

So you don't know Don Giovanni from Die Fledermaus? Beginning this November, the staff and supporters of the Boston Lyric Opera are inviting all 20- and 30-somethings to get educated on what is perhaps the most sophisticated of dramatic art forms. And they aren't afraid to come on strong.

The BLO will host a half-priced performance of La Bohème at the Shubert Theatre (265 Tremont St., Boston) Nov. 10, exclusively for the under-40 set. It doesn't get more dramatic than Giacomo Puccini's operatic tale of impoverished young artists and lovers in Paris. Two giant projection screens will provide English subtitles, so even if your Italian is imperfetto, you won't miss a single utterance of Mimì and Rodolfo's ill-fated romantic escapades. After the show, head to Blu, the fourth-floor hot spot overlooking the Theater District, for the after-party, where revelers will enjoy drinks, hors d'oeuvres and desserts, and mingle with cast members.

Opera tickets go on sale Oct. 1 and range from $18 to $62. The after-party at Blu costs an additional $35. 617-542-4912; www.blo.org/bravo.

Young Collectors

(Co|So Circle) Copley Society of Art

Choosing and purchasing your first piece of art can feel more stressful than thrilling. You want to know how to assess the value of a painting, for example, and you want to pick wisely. The Copley Society of Art—or "Co|So"—wants to banish those fears and make collecting accessible. Dating to 1879, the society originally set out to help art-school graduates establish themselves in Boston—and in 2007 still supports some 500 artist-members. These days, Co|So also reaches out to those without formal training—the viewing and appreciating masses.

The Young Collectors group—also known as Co|So Circle—is geared to Boston-area professionals in their 20s and 30s. Launched by Co|So devotee Danielle Boudreau, the group funds a scholarship for a young emerging artist and hosts festive events like its Fresh Paint preview party, held at Co|So's Newbury Street gallery to build excitement for its parent organization's annual fundraiser of the same name. In addition, Co|So keeps the lower gallery of its Newbury Street location lined with small canvases available for purchase. Here, smallness is a proxy for modest prices, perfect for those collectors operating on a tight budget and living in tight quarters.

There's a $75 annual membership fee for Co|So Circle. Once you join, events are free. 617-536-5049; www.copleysociety.org.

Young Friends of Save Venice

Save Venice Boston

When Allison Drescher studied in Florence a decade ago, she became an unabashed Italophile. When Drescher later found herself back in Boston, she became an equally unabashed philanthropist, joining a group called Save Venice to help raise hundreds of thousands of dollars annually for preserving the floating city's art and architecture. Founded in Boston but headquartered in New York, it's one of about 50 private committees worldwide with a similar mission. "We raise more than all of the others combined," says Drescher, who adds that the restoration of a 16th-century canvas in the Church of San Zaccaria was funded exclusively by the Young Friends of Save Venice Boston chapter.

Indeed, a key feature of Save Venice is that its newest members undertake their own restoration projects and the fundraising that supports them, adds Boston chapter chair Juan Prieto. The informal collective who make up the Young Friends "propose their own events, and if approved, go right on to stage them," Prieto says. "They definitely have an entrepreneurial thing going on." The Young Friends' creative fundraising efforts include a gala, as well as more erudite offerings like lectures on Venetian arts and music. Sometimes it takes a dance to save a sinking city.

The next Young Friends event is a "Wines of the Veneto" tasting Oct. 17 at the Rhys Gallery on Harrison Ave. in Boston. Payment ($75) is required in advance; contact Susan Angelastro (617-523-0574). Young Friends do not pay an annual membership fee. To join, contact Alli Drescher (617-268-6145). www.saveveniceboston.org.

"Breakfast at the ART"

American Repertory Theater

It's tough being a full-time mom (or Mr. Mom) with a soft spot for culture. Especially in Boston, where world-class theater companies taunt you with their exciting, cutting-edge productions. Don't they know you've got Cheerios to clean up and bath time to orchestrate? Well, the American Repertory Theater has got a solution. And it doesn't look anything like The Nanny Diaries.

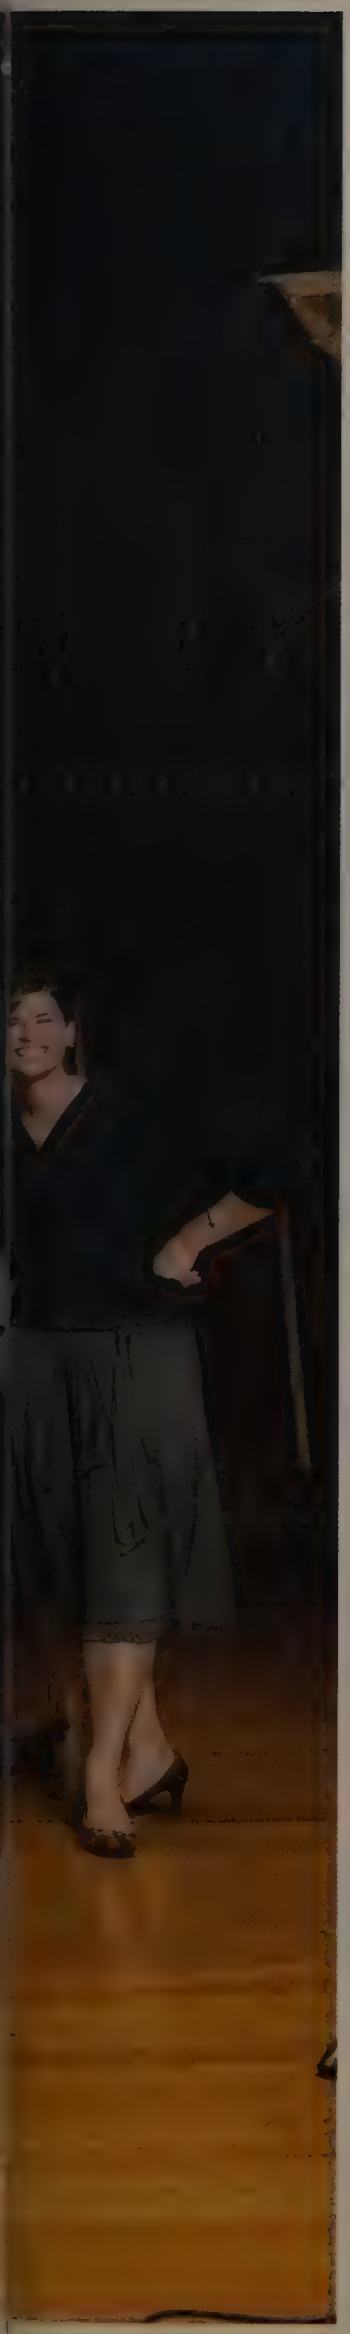
The company's "Breakfast at the ART" program is geared toward young parents. Up to four times a year, you can start your morning with coffee, pastries and a talk by acting artistic director Gideon Lester, all before the curtain goes up on a play—at 10 am. "Breakfast" participants get premium seats for $35, and the organizing committee limits the series to productions short enough to get you to little Madison's midday pick-up time from kindergarten.

"The series offers a creative opportunity to women and men who wouldn't otherwise get access to it," says Lenore Gustafson, cofounder of the program, which attracts about 175 people to each event. "And we don't check your wallet for kids' pictures. Everyone is welcome."

The first event of the 2007 series takes place Sept. 19 and is a rare evening installment, featuring the opera Don Juan Giovanni. Tickets are $35 in advance or $40 at the door. "Breakfast" participants will still enjoy the traditional pre-show reception, along with remarks by Gideon Lester. 617-547-8300; www.amrep.org/breakfast.

Contemporary Studio

Fuller Craft



We hear you: With all due respect to knitting, a craft is generally the domain of elderly relatives, the outer suburbs and your basic holiday church bazaar. Now may we suggest you banish that stereotype for a moment and give the Fuller Craft Museum in Brockton a chance. This is no shrine to scrap-booking. The museum showcases the sort of fine pieces that result when artistic sensibilities are brought to bear on the design of functional objects. Think furniture, jewelry, ceramics and glassware. Let's try that again. Think of the brown leather chair Aidan made for Carrie on Sex and the City.

And because the Fuller's a contemporary museum—one of only eight such craft museums nationwide—there are

Playmakers

YOUNG ADULTS ENERGIZING THE ARTS

Behind exhibitions, plays and performances stand enthused 20- to 40-somethings committed to keeping Boston's art scene alive. First row: Sarah Ashby (Boston Lyric Opera) and Suzanne Logan (ICA New Group); second row: Neil St. John Raymond (Young Friends of Save Venice Boston), Ali Drescher (Young Friends of Save Venice Boston), Charlotte Mikk (ICA New Group), Kati Mitchell ("Breakfast at the ART"), Danielle Boudreau (ColSo Circle), Ari Barbanell ("Breakfast at the ART") and Lenka Kiss (Fuller Craft Museum Contemporary Studio); third row: Matthew Goulding (ColSo Circle) and Dave Anderson (Boston Lyric Opera)

no antiques, only objects made by today's working artisans. The appeal of these wares to younger urbanites is evident in the museum's Contemporary Studio group, which boasts about 60 members in their 20s, 30s and 40s, who enjoy up to 10 private exhibition previews with artists and curators each year. Always musical, social and philanthropic, the events are often followed by champagne receptions at Tamboo Bistro—a local eatery and lounge featuring Caribbean and American Nouveau cuisine.

Contemporary Studio membership is $25 (on top of a $40 individual membership). 508-588-6000; www.fullercraft.org.

The New Group

The Institute of Contemporary Art (ICA)

If the Institute of Contemporary Art wasn't previously on your radar screen, it probably is now, given the huge media coverage of its striking new building on the waterfront, which opened to the public last December. The architecture notwithstanding, lots of great things have been going on at the ICA—previously situated in the Back Bay—for many years, including its young member program, the New Group. (Got that? The New Group is a somewhat older group of young people.)

New Group's members also serve as ambassadors for contemporary art in the wider community.

With 250 members, the New Group has been raising funds, hosting bashes (they're throwing one in December to celebrate the ICA's one-year anniversary at its Waterfront location) and enjoying art together since 1999. Many of these participants also serve as ambassadors for contemporary art in the wider community by cohosting networking events with organizations from outside the art world, such as the Downtown Women's Club. "Many people think contemporary art is just paintings or photographs that hang on walls, but it's also about music and dance and multimedia and a whole spectrum of things," says Suzanne Logan, the New Group's events chair. Gatherings, including an evening with Sotheby's on art collecting, gallery crawls along Newbury Street and exclusive speaker events (including one featuring an ICA curator's take on the museum's decision to build a permanent collection), help members learn more.

Individual annual memberships are $65, and joining the New Group costs an additional $100 per person. 617-478-3102; www.icaboston.org/give/new-group.

Repartee is geared to 21- to 38-year-olds, with nine receptions scheduled this season beginning Oct. 30, at a cost of $37 per event. Bolero is for those in their 40s and 50s who are attending a BSO performance by themselves and interested in socializing with others doing the same; there are four Bolero receptions this season beginning Nov. 9, and each reception costs $85. The events are held in Symphony Hall (301 Mass. Ave., Boston). For more information, contact Sarah Manoog (617-638-9341; smanoog@bso.org).

YMOD is open to anyone in their 20s to 40s, and the annual membership fee is $75 (on top of the $60 annual base membership). The group kicks off its autumn festivities Oct. 24 with its YMOD Fall for DeCordova Celebration, a reception with food, drink, music and good company, including artists and curators involved in current exhibitions. The event begins at 6:30 pm in the museum galleries; it's free for YMOD members and one guest, and tickets are $15 for nonmembers. For information, visit www.decordova.org or contact Denise Goode (781-259-3629; membership@decordova.org).

Handel and Haydn Society

The Handel and Haydn Society decided to name its new Friday-night concert series for young professionals HIPsters, in honor of the group's commitment to "historically informed performance." Designed for concertgoers between the ages of 30 and 45, the HIPster package costs $209 per person and includes tickets to three shows, each with a pre-performance reception. Programs feature much-loved pieces by well-known composers, and the series kicks off Oct. 19, with a reception at 7 pm and concert at 8 pm. Receptions are held in Horticultural Hall (300 Mass. Ave., Boston) and the concerts are at Symphony Hall (301 Mass. Ave.). For more information, visit www.handelandhaydn.org or contact the box office (617-266-3605).

Huntington Theatre Company

H_tix is a discount program available to those 21 through 35 who purchase tickets to at least four Huntington Theatre Company plays this season. In addition to $25 ticket prices, H_tix perks include advance news about contests and the occasional performance-night reception. To get involved, sign up for a free membership at www.huntingtontheatre.org/events. Plays are staged at both the Boston University Theatre (264 Huntington Ave., Boston) and the Stanford Calderwood Pavilion at the Boston Center for the Arts (527 Tremont St., Boston), so it's a good idea to double-check your tickets to confirm your destination before heading out on show night! For more information, call 617-266-0800 or visit the Web site.

Museum of Fine Arts

The Museum Council is a special category of MFA membership, first offered in 1980 in recognition of the unique ways that younger adults enjoy and support the arts. Benefits include exclusive exhibition previews, weekend trips and other special events throughout the year, such as the black-tie Summer Party, featuring a silent auction and other diversions. Museum Council memberships are available to MFA aficionados between the ages of 21 and 45, with different levels beginning at $250. The next event is the opening for Drama and Desire: Japanese Paintings from the Floating World, 1690-1850, on Sept. 15. A DRIVE-BY GUIDE to BOSTON MUSEUMS' Greatest Hits

THE ART OF THE QUICKIE By ETHAN GILSDORF

"ABSURD."

That's how I expected area museum curators to respond to the following challenge: If you had only 15 minutes to fly through your permanent collection, what three works of art would you declare absolute must-sees?

Take the Louvre. If tourists want to crow they "did" the cultural behemoth, they head straight for "La Jaconde" (aka the "Mona Lisa"), "Winged Victory of Samothrace" and "Venus de Milo," then scoot to the safety of the nearest McDonald's. Done and done.

Even in Boston, a highlight reel isn't such a bad idea. With so much world-class art, doing it all can seem a little daunting. There's nothing worse than enduring that eyes-glazed-over, lumbago-inducing, epic shuffle through centuries of Pre-Raphaelites, Post-Impressionism and blue periods. Museum-goers can use a focus.

So here's our guide to Boston's greatest artistic hits. For this quest to see the best, I also gave the experts an option to choose heretofore unknown masterpieces they wanted to bring to the public eye. And I challenged them to help me experience old faves in new ways.

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP: TITIAN'S "EUROPA" AND THE COURTYARD AT THE GARDNER MUSEUM; JOHN SINGLETON COPLEY'S "WATSON AND THE SHARK" AT THE MFA.

Museum of Fine Arts + Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum

The MFA may encompass 500,000 square feet and 450,000 objects (not all on display at once, thankfully), but veteran tour guide Dale Pollock appears undaunted by my challenge. "We're going to start in the Americas," she declares and dashes off. I can barely keep up.

First stop is Boston-born John Singleton Copley's "Watson and the Shark" (1778). Why did this rather gruesome, six-by-eight-foot scene of a boy being attacked, à la Jaws, make the cut? "It was ground-breaking for the times to depict an ordinary man in a heroic setting," says Pollock. "People respond. It's high drama." And fun. In her tours, she likes to role-play. "My leg is ... shhk-kppp [sound of teeth severing flesh] ... by a shark!"

Next, the Impressionism gallery: The MFA has some 43 crowd-pleasing Monets, but Pollock directs my attention to Renoir's "Dance at Bougival" (1883), an intimate scene of flirtation on the dance floor. "The man is making his move, and she is coyly looking away," she gushes. "It is said [Renoir] never painted a sad picture." It makes me feel like dancing. Pollock adds that this image appears frequently on posters in dental offices.

Our last waltz brings us down to the art of the ancient world and the MFA's collection of 4,500-year-old Egyptian relics. "Most people just go to the mummies," she remarks. Indeed, I remember school field trips seeking out sarcophagi. "But one shines above them all," Pollock asks, impishly, "Can you tell?" I pass the test, picking out the pristine, grey stone sculpture of a couple frozen in time, "King Menkaure (Mycerinus) and Queen" (2490–2472 BC).

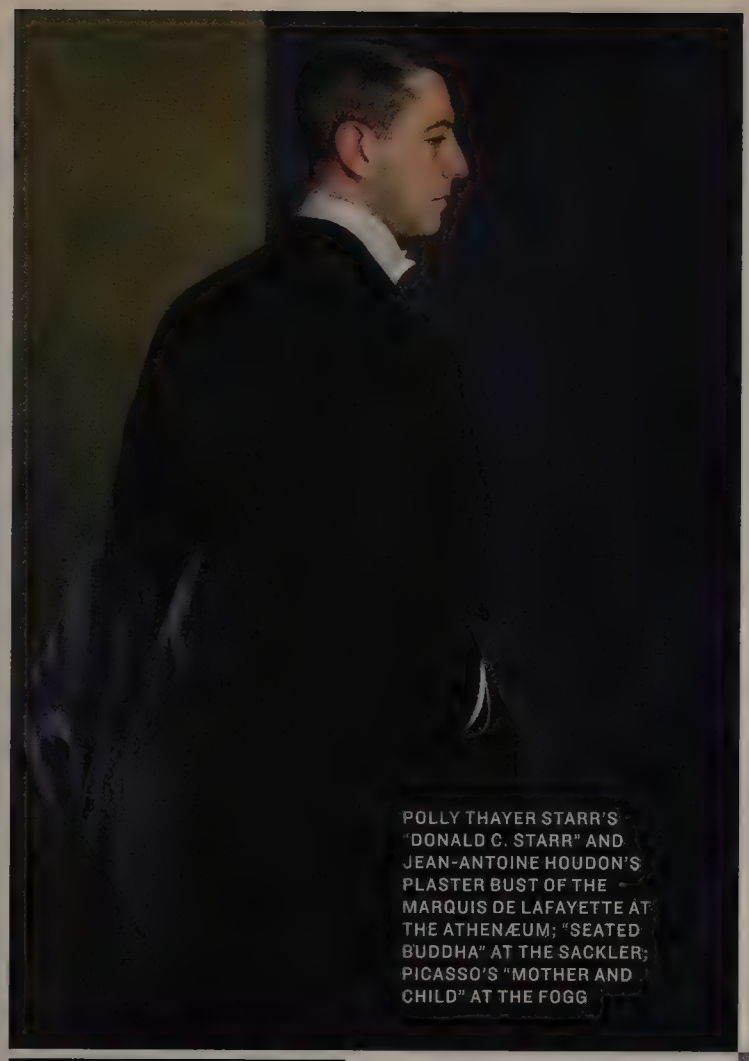
"They have this pose that they might be in the streets of Boston," she tells me. "I would rank it with the best sculpture of any era." I want to linger for eternity, too, but my time is up.

Like the MFA's eccentric aunt, the neighboring Gardner Museum promises quirkier masterpieces. Curator Alan Chong had a feeling I'd be inquiring about two predictable ones. First: Titian's "Europa," (1562), which depicts the god Jupiter in the form of a white bull carrying off princess Europa. "It's about sex," says Chong. It's also considered among the most important paintings in America; Gardner once wrote it made her "breathless" and "drunk." The other high-profile work is John Singer Sargent's "El Jaleo" (1882), a huge and moody paean to Spanish music and dance, set in a custom cloister decorated with Moorish arches and Mexican tiles. Every detail of the museum sprang from Gardner's vision, from the hand-picked collections, furniture and tapestries to the faux-15th-century Venetian palace that houses them all. "What people remember is the place," says Chong. The courtyard, festooned with Roman statuary set around a second-century mosaic of Medusa, ferns and seasonal flowers, might outshine everything else. "The great work of art is the courtyard itself."



"Just float around" is how Chong suggests visitors appreciate the Gardner. "It's a place to escape." And escape I do.

Boston Athenæum + Boston Public Library

TWO UNSUNG institutions are the Boston Athenæum and the Boston Public Library, both known as repositories of books, not art.

At the low-profile Athenæum, people assume you need a secret password to gain entrance. Not so. "The first floor is always open to the public," painting and sculpture curator David Dearinger tells me. "I try to keep as many works of art out here" as possible. As he puts it, art is "lurking everywhere"—between the stacks, even in the stairwells.

Dearinger's best-of includes a Sargent portrait, "George McCullough" (1901), visible in one of the members-only reading rooms. There's also a portrait by Back Bay–native Polly Thayer Starr of her husband, "Donald C. Starr" (1934), strikingly reminiscent of Sargent's famous "Madame X," Dearinger says. But "probably the greatest work of art in the collection," he says, would be Jean-Antoine Houdon's plaster bust of the Marquis de Lafayette (c. 1789). "It's a superb example of late-18th-century portraiture by the greatest sculptor of its day." It used to belong to Thomas Jefferson. "Monticello would love to have it, but they ain't gettin' it," Dearinger says. Lucky Boston.

POLLY THAYER STARR'S "DONALD C. STARR" AND JEAN-ANTOINE HOUDON'S PLASTER BUST OF THE MARQUIS DE LAFAYETTE AT THE ATHENÆUM; "SEATED BUDDHA" AT THE SACKLER; PICASSO'S "MOTHER AND CHILD" AT THE FOGG

At the BPL, to see the big masterpieces, I get a neck-ache craning my head up at the massive murals blanketing the hallways and stairwells. Foremost among them: the "Triumph of Religion" (1919) by Sargent (yes, him again), which library president Bernard Margolis describes as a public art project, "the Big Dig of its time." Margolis also calls this epic mural sequence depicting Judaism, Christianity, even pagan gods like the hideous Moloch, "the Sistine Chapel of America." Magnificent. More humble are the Edwin Austin Abbey murals "Sir Galahad and the Quest for the Holy Grail" (1895), richly detailed as a huge children's book illustration. Other treasures include the marble lions by Louis Saint-Gaudens, guarding the staircase, and vaulting above them, the "Muses" mural series by Puvis de Chavannes.

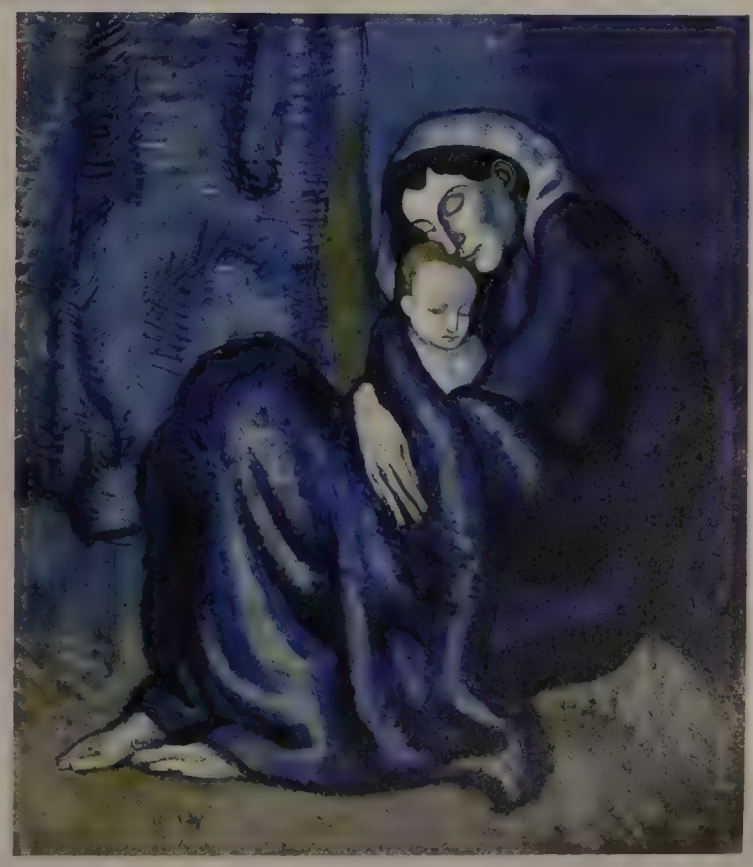
Arthur M. Sackler Museum, Busch-Reisinger Museum, Fogg Art Museum

AT THE TRIO of Harvard University art museums, picking just three works amidst the Greek and Roman coins, Islamic art, Rembrandts, Van Goghs and Pollocks stretching from antiquity to the present is no easy task. Director of communications Daron Manoogian says he "diplomatically" selected a "signature" object from each of the museums.

The Busch-Reisinger, he tells me, "is all about German-speaking countries and northern and central Europe." He points out Expressionist artist Max Beckmann's matter-of-fact "Self-Portrait in Tuxedo" (1927) as a central work. In the Sackler, a small Chinese bronze with an incredible title, "Seated Buddha Sakyamuni in Meditation With Hands in Dhyana-Mudra and With Flaming Shoulders" (3rd–5th century), is considered a humble gem off in a nook by itself, overwhelmed by bigger Buddhas.

Many visitors glom onto European paintings, and the Fogg has its share of heavy hitters. Picasso's "Mother and Child" (1901) is "one of our most admired pictures," says Stephan Wolohojian, curator of paintings, sculpture and decorative arts. "Really one of the most amazing examples of Picasso's blue period." Wolohojian calls it moving, tender and full of pathos. FYI, the Fogg and Busch-Reisinger will shut down for major renovations in June 2008. During the facelift, key works from all three museums will be on display at the Sackler.

Institute of Contemporary Art



NEWEST ON THE museum scene, the ICA's gleaming glass box by the sea only just began amassing its own collection. "'Permanent' is an interesting moniker for a museum of contemporary art," jokes assistant curator Jen Mergel, power-touring me through the minimalist space. Thus far, they've acquired 41 works by 22 artists, which supplement the changing exhibitions.

Mergel selects Cornelia Parker's "Hanging Fire (Suspected Arson)" (1999)—essentially bits of charred wood suspended in the air by wire, like an orderly explosion of charcoal. "It's definitely a keystone piece," says Mergel, and it was the first work the ICA acquired. Another fave of Mergel's is the video "Karaoke Wrong Number" (2001–04). In it, the artist Rachel Perry Welty is shown lip-synching, deadpan, to messages left by mistake on her answering machine. Mergel says it "speaks to connection and disconnection." True. It's also funny. As far as brand-name artists, the ICA owns "Cell (Hands and Mirror)" (1995) by hugely influential sculptor Louise Bourgeois. The haunting installation, "a seminal piece for her," says Mergel, comprises a marble sculpture of hands enclosed by metal fuse box doors lined with mirrors.

DeCordova Museum + Sculpture Park, Davis Museum, Peabody Essex Museum

TO SEE THREE MORE far-flung, suburban institutions, a car (or clever Commuter Rail navigating) is necessary. I had, in the past, ambled through the DeCordova's bucolic, 35-acre grounds of grass and trees. But among the some-75 outdoor sculptures, I'd never been told what to look for. Luckily, Rachel Rosenfield Lafo, director of curatorial affairs, is here to shepherd me.

First, we hit George Rickey's kinetic "Three Lines" (1964), a trio of 18-foot-long stainless steel blades. "He talked about this piece being a line drawing in space," she says. "It changes with the wind and weather." It's both playful and elegant. The other masterpiece is a curious one: a 1936 Chrysler Air Stream car, painted silver, with video screens mounted in the windows playing slides of the artist's work while monitors blare Mozart. The whole package, "Requiem to the 20th Century" (1997), is Nam June Paik's elegy to the passing of the manufacturing age and the rise of the information age, or what Lafo calls "the flicker of culture and information and politics."

Of all area museums, perhaps Wellesley College's Davis Museum is the most overlooked. After being closed for a year, Davis' permanent collection is relaunching Sept. 19 in a new, nonchronological configuration. "What we are doing is themes," says Dabney Hailey, curator of painting, sculpture and photography. In the "Ideal Figures" section of the new gallery, expect "unusual juxtapositions" like a wooden Baga D'mba mask from Guinea next to an ancient masterpiece: "Roman Standing Male Nude" (100 BC–100 AD), a statue in the manner of Polykleitos. It's one of only two such sculptures in the country with intact heads, she says. Historically significant, yes, but the nude is also "a very sexy guy," Hailey notes, with "a great butt." Elsewhere in the Davis and worth noting, John Frederick Kensett's "Mount Washington from the Valley of Conway" (1851), an oil-on-canvas that shows cultivated fields, a church, a village and people dwarfed by a mountain. It "seems like a dull landscape until you look hard," she says. It's "about the expansive possibility of America."

Farthest afield on my quest is Salem's Peabody Essex, America's oldest continuously operating museum, which comprises 24 historic buildings and 2.4 million works—maritime artifacts, Asian and Oceanic art, pieces by Native Americans and tons more. There's the commanding sculpture of the Hawaiian war god Kuka'ilimoku (c. 1800) carved from breadfruit wood. There's also the "Moon Bed" (1876), a "tour de force of cabinetry" with inlaid bone and ivory, made by Sung Sing Kung for the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition. But among all the treasures, the crown jewel must be the Yin Yu Tang House, a 200-year-old merchant's home from the Huizhou region of China, taken apart brick by brick and painstakingly reconstructed in the museum's courtyard. Visitors freely roam the two floors, peeking into bedrooms with original furnishings, examining the intricate latticework and imagining life around a carp pool.

"Some people can say, 'I wasn't into this,'" chief curator Lynda Hartigan tells me, "but because of this... transformational!" Which, I suppose, is the point of art—whether you have 15 minutes or 15 hours to appreciate it. I want to spend a lifetime, but really, I have to go.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

ALL THE WORLD'S A STAGE

Leah Hager Cohen's House Lights examines a dysfunctional family of therapists and actors who live in Cambridge and Beacon Hill.

As the only child of two psychologists who live in Cambridge and are affiliated with a local university that goes unnamed, Beatrice leads an insular, sophisticated, almost smugly charmed life. But when she learns her father has been accused of sexual improprieties with his young patients and sees that her passively enabling mother won't leave him, she throws her allegiance across the Charles to the rarefied Beacon Hill salon of her grandmother, Margaret Fourcey. A famous actress, Fourcey has long been cut off from her daughter, Beatrice's mom. On Beacon Hill, Beatrice embarks on new adventures, becoming a minor actress herself, betraying her mother as she joins the ranks of this grandma who once abandoned her family to go on the stage. Beatrice, aware of the eerie resonance with her own father's actions, marries a director almost 30 years her senior. Transgression is one of the themes that is subtly turned and twisted in this novel. So is the matter of what's real: Do actors arrive at some supreme truth, or is it all just skilled artifice? Similarly, is Beatrice's father truly empathic with his patients or a mere exploiter? Cohen squeezes out questions of generational evolution and complexity through variously sympathetic characters, offering no easy answers.

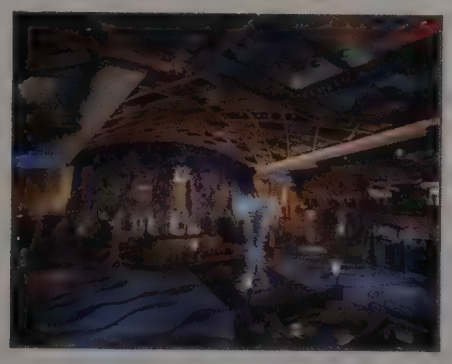
OPRAHS IN TRAINING

Boston's Strong Women, Strong Girls (617-224-1304; www.swsg.org) pairs college mentors with third through fifth graders from the inner city. The next training session take places in mid-October.



In a female-heroic spirit, Strong Women, Strong Girls (SWSG) aims to inspire youngsters to aspire to the Parnassus of accomplishment. What Oprah, Sally Ride, Michelle Kwan, Madeleine Albright and Bethany Hamilton, who lost her arm to a shark, have accomplished, they can hope for, too. Not just star-struck observers, the girls translate these life stories into messages about overcoming challenges, developing determination and perseverance. During this action-rich mentoring hour-and-a-half, they focus on skills, role modeling and relationships, not to mention critical thinking, cultural sensitivity and stress management. They learn how, yes, Madonna manages her pre-concert nervousness by doing yoga, which they then practice. The kids are exposed to many things, including sign language, Mandarin, and arts and crafts. And the lessons learned are applied through action or metaphor (they act out the digestive system, playfully miming the throat, the stomach, etc.). Kid-conflict issues like bullying are worked on, and the contemplative art of journal writing allows them to relate what they've learned to their own lives. Girls also visit, early on, a college campus. Fitting, since Lindsay Hyde founded SWSG while at Harvard.

Finally, a to-do list you'll really want to do.

The Other "Green" Beer

Organic brews and "obscure" cuts of meat

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Organic is everywhere: Wal-Mart sells organic fruits and vegetables, and organic wines show up on many a restaurant list. Less well-known, but garnering increasing attention, is organic beer.

Always a proponent of all things natural and sustainable, Chris Douglass, chef/proprietor of Ashmont Grill in Dorchester, is partnering with SlowFood Boston to host a Sept. 19 dinner that will feature organic beer from Peak Organic Brewing Company. The beer will be paired with several courses of meat produced by artisanal farmers and provided by Northeast Family Farms.

Meat, of course, "pairs well with beer in general," says Douglass. Depending on whatever meats are available, he expects to prepare "hearty beer fare: maybe sausages, some pâté, a terrine, maybe pickled tongue." He's especially interested in "more obscure cuts like cheeks, trotters, tongue."

Ashmont Grill chef/proprietor Chris Douglass

Is there an untapped market for organic beer? "It's not that common," says Douglass, "but there's such a demand for organic right now, some people seek it out almost religiously. Using clean whole grains, hops and barley—it's a good thing."

Potables & Printers

When Asian Market opens this fall in the space of the former Rendang in Harvard Square, owner Bik Yonjan (co-owner of Om) predicts it will be the "noncorporate counterpart" to Wagamama. Here's what to expect: high-definition Asian kung fu movies on a big screen! A chef from Penang whose mostly Malaysian menu will include Japane and Indian-inspired dishes! A huge sel tion of Asian beer! Free use of laptops printers! Bubble tea in a lounge atm phere! And much, much more, all sla to be available seven days a week.

Art: The Great 'Scape

"I destroyed my credit, I spent everything in my contractor business in the last six months, and I bor everything I could for this production," says Savvas Spyridopoulos. What could drive a man to such extreme measures? In this case, art—specifically, art that calls for elevator inspections, sheetrock and months' worth of rent on primo real estate. Those expenses add up, but for Bostonian Spyridopoulos, Mass. College of Art grad and owner of Ithaka Contracting & Design Co., the price of the nonprofit active showcase known as Soundscape 2007 is worth it. His installation is an 8,000-square-foot labyri spanning the fifth floor of a soon-to-be-developed property in Fort Point Channel. Within the space, musicians strategically placed near multimedia artworks—sculptures, paintings, videos, sound and lig installations—play an elaborate game of telephone, each of them improvising off their neighbors' riff "audience" is meant to wander through the labyrinth and soak up the combination of audio and visu effects. Spyridopoulos plans to start an organization to fund free public art. "I'm doing this to bring u ventional art and music to a wider public," he says. 368 Congress St., Boston (617-669-5690). www.s scape2007.com. 7-11 pm. Free. —Amanda Knorr

Books: He Floats Our Boat

In the literary world, it's sink or swim. When Junot Diaz debuted with Drown at age 27, he proved he could do more than just tread water; his short-story collection won major acclaim, and the literati anointed him a hot young author to watch. That was in 1997, and fans have been clamoring for a follow-up ever since. Well, we finally have it: Diaz's first novel, The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao. The tale follows an overweight, socially stunted Dominican trying to find love while haunted by a family curse. The MIT writing prof sails up the Charles for a reading and signing sponsored by the Harvard Book Store. 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-661-1515). www.harvard.com/events. 6 pm. $5. —Megan Lisagor

Music: Don't Call It Myanmar

When Boston's beloved Mission of Burma reunited in 2002 (after a brief 19-year hiatus), we were excite When they released their second studio LP, ONoffON, in 2004, we were ecstatic. And when we heard th 2006 album The Obliterati—well, by then we were just speechless; which is good, since we can't talk ov the ultra-amplified sounds the legendary postpunk rockers are famous for. But now that they've schedul gig at the ICA (which, by the way, has the coolest-looking auditorium in Boston), we're beside ourselves. Guess we have no choice but to rock out with the band as they play new tracks, along with some of thei classic cuts. Institute of Contemporary Art, 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617-478-3100). www.icaboston.org. pm. $25, general admission; $20, members, seniors and students. —AK

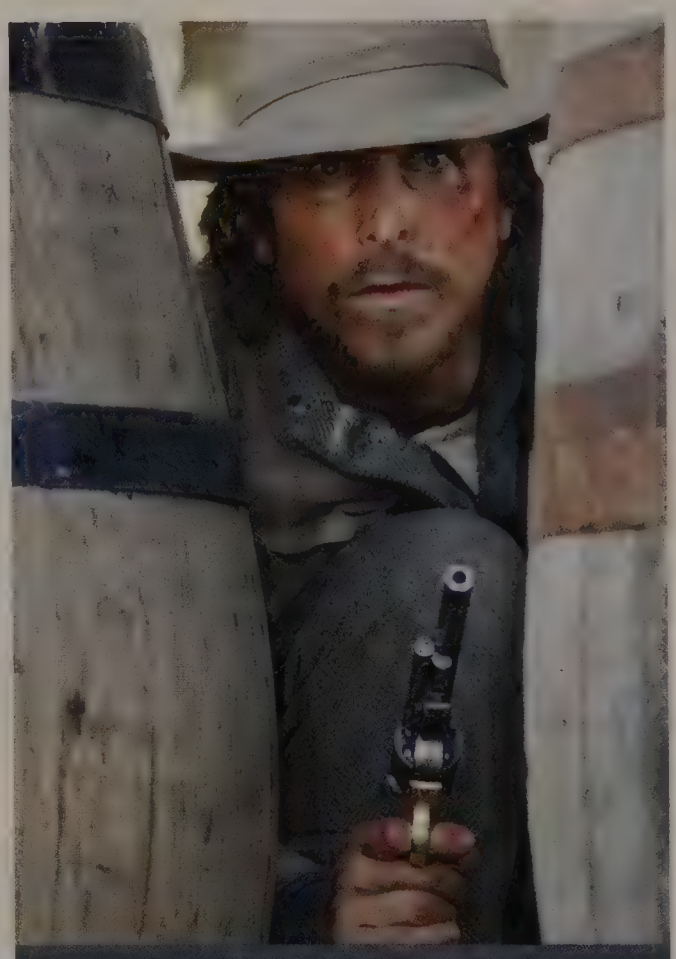
Wild West Morality and Gun Play



3:10 to Yuma exhibits the timeless appeal of the Western genre

BY SEAN BURNS

I've always said Westerns are a lot like pizza and sex—even when they're lousy, they're still pretty good.

It's been painful to watch the genre fall out of fashion over the past 20-odd years. But movies thrive on the youth market, and executives, perhaps correctly, assume that these kids today, with their videogames and their iPods, are too concerned with the newest, shiniest thing and think of cowboy sagas as that ancient stuff their dads watch on TBS. And it's a damn shame: The Western holds a unique elemental pull, with those lawless frontier settings offering filmmakers a chance to distill their stories down to essential questions of honor and individual morality, while at the same time engaging directly with our national mythology.

3:10 to Yuma began as a short story penned by then-fledgling writer Elmore Leonard for Dime Western magazine back in 1953. Four years later, it was adapted into a sleek little B-picture by screenwriter Halsted Welles and director Delmer Daves. The film's reputation has blossomed over time, and rightfully so. A lean, compulsively watchable yarn, 3:10 to Yuma cast Glenn Ford against type as sinister Ben Wade, an apprehended stage coach robber bound for the title's prison train. Van Helfin costars as Dan Evans, a down-on-his-luck rancher who finds himself standing up and taking charge after all the local lawmen scatter in fear of Wade's ruthless gang. In the best "a man's gotta do what a man's gotta do" tradition, Evans risks everything on principle—first amusing, and eventually confounding his silver-tongued captive.

Christian Bale upholds the law with barrels blazing

Despite the blockbuster business and awards-season glory that greeted his sturdy (if unspectacular) Johnny Cash biopic Walk the Line, director James Mangold didn't have an easy time realizing his lifelong dream of remaking 3:10 to Yuma. Though first announced as a big-budget studio project, names like Tom Cruise, Joaquin Phoenix and Eric Bana came and went while the money shrank, until the project was eventually pulled together by upstart indie distributor Lionsgate, thanks largely to the participation of Russell Crowe, who grabbed the reins of the Ben Wade role and delivers one of his best, most delightfully idiosyncratic performances.

As modern screenwriting conventions prohibit the elegant simplicity of the original 3:10 to Yuma, Welles' script has been padded by Michael Brandt and Ben Haas with all sorts of superfluous characters, over-explained back-stories and extraneous action sequences. Yet the core of the story remains so compelling, classically structured and, frankly, impossible to botch, that Mangold's 3:10 to Yuma enthralls even when it's stumbling all over the place.

Most of the credit should go to the two leads. Continuing his string of chameleonic turns, Christian Bale plays the put-upon sad sack Dan Evans as an irritable Civil War vet with a wooden foot and crumbling prospects. His wife barely looks at him, his sons openly mock him, and even though Evans claims he's only in this mess for the money, a wildfire burns behind his eyes as the situation grows ever more perilous. There's nothing so dangerous as a man with something to prove, and Bale's slow-boil performance begins to crackle with electricity as Evans takes mule-headed stubbornness to increasingly illogical, possibly suicidal, levels.

But the movie belongs to Russell Crowe, who undercuts his usual moody magnetism with a sly playfulness we haven't seen from him since Master and Commander. When required to use deadly force, he moves with terrifying speed and ferocity, but most of the time Crowe makes the odd and fascinating choice to keep Ben Wade at a calm and bemused distance from the proceedings. We get the clear sense that he could escape at any time, but there's something about this rancher's dogged persistence that tickles the outlaw's fancy. Accustomed as Wade is to bounty hunters, Pinkertons and cut-throat railroad men, Evans' uncompromised idealism is an alien trait, and Crowe approaches their interactions with prickly curiosity, figuring he'll hang around at least long enough to push some buttons and see if this guy is the real deal.

Bale and Crowe are strong enough to make you wish Mangold had stuck with the spare, dialogue-driven approach of the original picture, which clocked in about half an hour shorter than this remake. But I guess two powerhouse performances aren't enough to hold an audience's attention these days, so we must digress into several klutzy action sequences that were clearly conceived for a larger budget. There's also a jarring, over-the-top turn from Ben Foster as Crowe's ferociously loyal right-hand man. His freakish caterwauling at odds with the layered nuance of his co-stars, Foster seems to have wandered in from one of the Young Guns.

Despite some obvious flaws, 3:10 to Yuma remains impossible to resist as it grapples with questions of character in a rough-hewn, violent landscape. It's a real Western, and sometimes that's enough. IB

Bursting with talent and promises the movie isn't quite ambitious enough to deliver on, Hannah feels more like an announcement of better things to come. (At the Brattle Theatre.)

Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix ★★★½

The Harry Potter films thus far have felt like a collection of tie-in products dutifully recreating everybody's favorite scenes as if genuflecting before the Stations of the Cross. But now, four sequels into this saga, it finally feels like we're watching an honest-to-god movie. Forced to slash JK Rowling's unwieldy 870-page novel to a trim two hours and change, director David Yates and screenwriter Michael Goldenberg have at last reconceived the Potter-verse in purely cinematic terms. They scrapped all that Quidditch nonsense and zero in on Harry's adolescent struggle to wrap his still-forming mind around the fallibility of authority figures, the finality of death and the stinking unfairness of how the world really works. It's a surprisingly dark and violent coming-of-age tale, and Yates finds some nifty visual parallels for the character's inner journey. Young Daniel Radcliffe is growing into the role quite nicely, and the most overqualified supporting cast in history again excels, with extra kudos going to Gary Oldman, Alan Rickman and Imelda Staunton's fascist schoolmarm. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry ★

The Invasion ★½

A couple of years ago, director Oliver Hirschbiegel tried his hand at an update of Jack Finney's oft-imitated Invasion of the Body Snatchers, this time with the subversive spin that perhaps those pod people aren't so bad: At least a world in which been transformed into emotionless zombi be a peaceful one. He cast Nicole Kidr shrink, which begs the question of how d nation zonked on Prozac and Zoloft might from Finney's future. Alas, Hirschbiegel proved too cerebral for test audiences, so Joel Silver brought in the Wachowski Bro Matrix fame) to rewrite and reshoot massiv of the picture, resulting in one of the mos phrenic patch-jobs to escape from a major ages. The Invasion is a berserk quilt of cont scenes, arbitrary, outlandish action sequen lot of rushed expository speeches that fran no sense. It's as if the movie itself was take pod people. (At Boston Common, Fenwa the suburbs.)

The King of Kong: A Fistful of Quarters ★★★½

Seth Gordon's weirdly thrilling documenta audience favorite at this year's Independ Festival of Boston. It's easy to see why. Aft on-his-luck Steve Wiebe got laid off from Boeing, he bought a retro Donkey Kong and started playing every day. A lot. It w long before Steve had topped the game's high score, a record set in 1982 by gaming superstar and hot sauce tycoon Billy Mit the story unspools, it's fascinating, and mo little sad, to see how this deeply cloistere ture rallies to keep Wiebe out of the reco The pompous, arrogant Mitchell dodges e of a head-to-head competition and uses his hero status and some underhanded tactic ginalize his good-natured challenger. The Nanny Diaries ★★

It's no coincidence that one of the cha spotted reading The Devil Wears Prada Springer Berman and Robert Pulcini's clu adaptation of this other chick-lit staple with savage satire only to consistently retre stereotyping, the movie stars Scarlett Johan confused college grad who accidentally nanny to a cloying little sprite of Upper royalty and is forced to endure the abuse o entitled harridan mother (Laura Linney) tant, horndog dad (Paul Giamatti). Linn skillful an actress to go for easy caricature neath a scary, lacquered-on smile she gives pered Manhattan mom an undertone of ger fering that the movie doesn't quite know handle. A dark passage in Nantucket hir picture this might have been, but Berman cop out with a lot of broad, fourth-wall breaking ices and a frustrating anti-climax. With her ky voice and lazy mannerisms, Johansson has all wrong energy for bumbling slapstick, which de- s the comic set-pieces around her. (At Boston nmon, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

h a marked absence of partisan editorializing and a hint of snark, this no-nonsense, just-the- s-ma'am chronicle of our ill-fated Iraq occupa- turns into a chilly autopsy of what might be the est foreign policy disaster of our lifetimes. Direc- Charles Ferguson is the anti–Michael Moore. re are no clownish pranks, and the filmmaker re- s to grant himself a second of screen time. No in Sight is simply facts, dates, timelines, eyewit- accounts and hard evidence, and it's absolutely ting. Beginning with the "Mission: Accom- ned" photo-op that will forever live in infamy, uson zeroes in on the few crucial months just Saddam was overthrown and consults with the ple who were there on the ground to present a ly dispassionate overview of every bureaucratic h-job you could imagine. surrecting the Champ ★★ phantic movie critic–turned–terrible filmmaker Lurie strikes again, this time with this skillfully d, woefully misguided tale of a frustrated sports- er (Josh Hartnett) who falls under the spell of a le, fast-talking homeless man (Samuel L. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rush Hour 3 ★½

In the sorry tradition of Beverly Hills Cop III, here's another of those years-late, breathakingly lazy three-quels in which everybody involved carries on as if they've already earned their massive paychecks simply by showing up. Jackie Chan and Chris Tucker once again play mismatched cop buddies, and once again both men seem to be competing in some private wager to see who can do more damage to the English language. Jeff Nathanson's screenplay, which is really more a collection of arbitrary twists and unmotivated set pieces, sends the bickering duo to Paris in search of a mythical Triad boss. I guess a $150 million budget doesn't buy what it used to. Thanks to Brett Ratner's limp, functional direction, the City of Lights looks more like a Hollywood backlot. Chan just seems tired, and his acrobatic hi-jinks are more dutiful than inspiring. Tucker does what he always does: squeal, yap and ad-lib with no regard for character, his co-stars, or what's happening around him. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Simpsons Movie ★★½

A television institution, which even the most devoted fan must admit is now well past its prime, Matt Groening's dysfunctional cartoon clan makes their big-screen debut in a feature that feels at least nine years late and a few jokes short. I don't suppose there's anything particularly wrong with The Simpsons Movie, save maybe the nagging sensation of familiarity, if not contempt, and a little bit of boredom. The trademark gags arrive densely packed during the film's first 20 minutes or so, but then thin considerably after an unwieldy plot turn sends the family scattering off to Alaska. Probably a matter of logistics, the sprawling supporting cast gets precious little screen-time, but the renewed focus on our main characters earns a couple of unexpected emotional dividends. Still, when all is said and done, The Simpsons Movie feels like watching two or three episodes back-to-back—hardly an unpleasant experience, but maybe not worth a trip to the theater. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Stardust ★★★

In his Sandman comics, as well as the terrific novel Good Omens, writer Neil Gaiman is at his best when he's grounding supernatural concepts in banal workaday realities. There's a droll, understated comedy to Gaiman's enchanted realms, and director Matthew Vaughn's adaptation of his Stardust nails this tricky tone better than one probably had any right to expect. This fractured fairy tale stars Claire Danes as a star who has plummeted to Earth and possesses certain celestial properties sought by a rogue's gallery of villains and tricksters—most notably Michelle Pfeiffer's vamping wicked witch. Charlie Cox is the bumbling swashbuckler who comes to our damsel's rescue, and these two bicker their way, screwball-style, through an episodic collection of inventive set-pieces and throwaway gags. Danes is a bit awkward for her role, but the supporting cast runs away with the film, particularly a revitalized Robert De Niro as a fearsome pirate with a secret. Sometimes Stardust gets sloppy, but there's plenty of life and imagination in the margins. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sunshine ★★½

There's maybe half a great movie to be found in director Danny Boyle's somber, initially enthralling sci-fi head-trip. Set 50 years in the future, the movie follows a bickering band of astronauts during a treacherous attempt to jumpstart our faltering sun. Just as Boyle and screenwriter Alex Garland synthesized half a century's worth of cinematic zombie lore in their terrific 28 Days Later, Sunshine shoplifts hefty chunks from 2001, Solaris, Alien and even Mission to Mars. Meditative and methodical, the film's first hour is distinguished by its chilly, adult tone and the controlled, striking compositions of cinematographer Alwin H. Kuchler. But there's a daring conceptual gambit by Boyle that doesn't quite come off: As the mission begins to fall apart, so goes the picture's visual fabric. Thus, as the plausible malfunctions are replaced by an outlandish killer-in-the-house twist, Kuchler's sumptuously slow dolly shots go all herky-jerky handheld, the last reel spazzing completely out of control alongside the spaceship itself, until Sunshine finally collapses into a deliberately disorienting light-show. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Superbad ★★★½

2007 is going to go down in history as the summer that Judd Apatow and Seth Rogen saved American comedy. On the heels of their triumphant Knocked Up comes the funniest and most down-to-Earth high school movie since Fast Times at Ridgemont High. Superbad stars the blisteringly profane Jonah Hill as a kid whose entire sexual education has come from dubious sources on the Internet, while Arrested Development's Michael Cera tags along as his sidekick—a gentle young man who doesn't seem to have figured out how to work his body just yet. It's a long, wild night of misadventures as this less-than-dynamic duo and their brilliantly squirmy friend Fogell (Christopher Mintz-Plasse) attempt to score some liquor and seduce their dreamgirls. The intricate gag constructions devised by Rogen and his writing partner, Evan Goldberg, spin from disasters to delights and then back again. These characters keep finding ways to surprise us with improbable, but quite genuine, pangs of pathos, even as you can't believe what you're hearing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Ten ★★

Imagine Krzysztof Kieslowski's The Decalogue as a sophomoric, stoner sketch comedy revue, and you've got The Ten, director David Wain's collection of loosely-connected short films based upon the Ten Commandments. Enlisting an eclectic cast that includes Winona Ryder, Oliver Platt, Liev Schrieber, Paul Rudd and Jessica Alba, alongside several alumni from his old comedy troupes Stella and the State, Wain cobbles together a hit-and-miss grab bag that misses more often than it hits. Your own experience may vary, as this gang's random, self-consciously surreal humor has a passionate following, but personally, I prefer a little less winking at the audience. Interestingly enough, the most successful segments are the ones featuring the dramatic actors. They throw themselves into the roles with a reckless abandon the comedians can't quite muster. Special mention goes to Ryder who stars in "Thou Shalt Not Steal" as a prim and proper woman who falls head over heels for a ventriloquist's dummy. Winona plays the silliness with such absolute dim-bulb sincerity that it's touching. (At Kendall Square.)

2 Days in Paris ★★★

The enchanting Julie Delpy makes her directorial debut and stars in this very funny, if slightly uneven, culture-clash farce that follows a bickering young couple's strained 48 hours in the city of light. Just don't expect the dreamy romanticism of the similarly structured Delpy vehicle Before Sunset, as here she and real-life ex Adam Goldberg mine all sorts of awkward and uncomfortable comedic scenarios that

MOVIES

...ent Paris as swarming with psycho cabdrivers, ...derly nymphomaniacs and sleazy former lovers lurking around every corner. A muscled, tattooed Goldberg borrows Woody Allen's timing and delivery as he plays a jittery hypochondriac aghast at the parade of exes Delpy's loopy photographer keeps bumping into. Surprisingly enough, 2 Days in Paris sports almost as many penis jokes as Superbad, as well as the inspired use of an arsonist, vegan guardian angel. Delpy's use of handheld cameras and jump cuts pay cheeky homage to the French New Wave, but occasionally the filmmaking becomes so frazzled you wish she'd back off just a bit. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

War ★

As a centuries-old feud between Chinese Triads and the Japanese Yakuza spills over onto the streets of San Francisco, Jet Li's mysterious assassin plays both sides against the middle, much to the consternation of Jason Statham's grizzled FBI agent. It sounds like the perfect recipe for a trashy pulp delight, but director Philip G. Atwell botches the opening moments and then never recovers as he drowns the material in overwrought posturing and incompetently staged fight sequences. The shoddy camerawork keeps denying us a clear view of Jet Li's physical grace, which leaves the poor guy stranded with only his dubious acting and pip-squeaky voice. Statham's one of the more amusing hard-asses in movies right now, but you'd never guess as much from his character's anguished over-emoting and tiresome histrionics. Not even a few gonzo plot developments can make much of an impression, as Atwell spends all his energy lingering on expensive cars and fancy fashions. It's one of those movies that feels like a trailer for itself. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Growing Pains

Kings of Leon try to turn the focus back to brilliant rock

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The Golden Rule: Do unto Kings of Leon as you would have Kings of Leon do unto you

If unpredictable behavior is a virtue for a rock band, Kings of Leon is vying for top honors in Boston lately. In June, the scruffy Tennessee rockers were a last-minute no-show at the WFNX street concert after frontman Caleb Followill called in sick. Then the group abruptly cut short a July makeup show at the Paradise after only 45 minutes following a nasty exchange with people in the crowd.

One sad thing about the latter incident was the band had yet to play "Knocked Up" and "On Call," new songs that provide both a sonic and lyrical departure from their earlier work and help make Because of the Times one of the year's best CDs.

One hopes that fans will finally get the snafu-free goods when Kings of Leon headline the Orpheum Sept. 28. However, when singer-guitarist Followill calls from his home outside Nashville, he's on the phone less than 10 minutes when he suddenly begs to postpone the conversation due to a sinus attack, noting, "I can't breathe... I'm kinda freaking out."

Two days later, drummer Nathan Followill, 28, steps in to finish the interview. He says of his 25-year-old brother, "Alcoholism is a problem, and we're going to support him through this," then laughs when his joke is taken seriously. "He rides his four-wheeler all through the woods, probably with all kinds of allergies sliding around."

Hey, any explanation would be believable for these rockers—well known for their dalliances with booze, drugs and sex. Their exploits became most prevalent in the U.K., where Kings of Leon (rounded out by kid brother Jared, 20, on bass, and first cousin Matthew Followill, 23, on lead guitar) were hailed as "the Southern Strokes" and treated like stars.

"Now when we're over there, we're like a kid in the candy store," says newly engaged Nathan. "But when you've got a mouth full of cavities, you can look, but you can't touch."

"We lived pretty fast early on, and we still have our fun," Caleb offers. "But we know now when to walk away. We don't want anything to take this away from us.... We've always kind of had a middle finger in the air as far as what the record labels told us to do, and it's pretty amazing that we're still in the position that we're in now."

The band's first two CDs, Youth & Young Manhood and Aha Shake Heartbreak, sounded like the Followill clan had soaked in the Rolling Stones, Neil Young, Tom Petty and the Who—all influences for brothers who grew up canvassing the South with their itinerant Pentecostal preacher father.

On the other hand, Because of the Times more frequently evokes the Pixies and U2. "We toured with U2 for quite a while," Nathan says. "So it was impossible not to be influenced by them and their tones and how good the songs sounded in huge arenas where nothing would sound good."

Of the quartet's new, more assertive chops—from his angular drum patterns to Matthew's pedal-enhanced guitar—Nathan adds, "I think it was just us getting so comfortable with each other musically that now we're to the point where we want our part to be the part that stands out in the song."

"Knocked Up" (with the opening line "I don't care what nobody says, we're gonna have a ba-by") and "On Call" mix eerie atmospherics with the concept of commitment, something not usually associated with lyricist Caleb. Nathan says the idea for the first song came from an incident where "we didn't know who it was going to be, but we definitely thought we were [each] going to be an uncle or a dad."

As for the Paradise incident, Nathan blames their quick exit on "a couple of guys down front who probably didn't realize how obnoxious they were. But they were in their own little world, making it difficult for all the fans around them. Then one of them threw something at Caleb." (The singer whacked over his mike stand, flashed his middle finger and spat in their direction before storming off.)

Asked if that showdown might recall the group's own past escapades (Caleb once adopted the alter-ego Rooster for a substance-addled mean streak, even toward his bandmates), Nathan says with a laugh, "I think that's what pissed Caleb off the most, is those guys were drunker than he was."

But if Kings of Leon's edgy music and lifestyle seem far removed from their strict church upbringing, the members of the group still convene backstage to sing a joint gospel song before each show. "It's kind of nice to sing something soothing," Caleb says, "before you have to go out there and scream and spit and tramp all over the place." IB

Kings of Leon play the Sept. 28 at the Orpheum Theatre.
